PREFACE

On the publication of another volume of the History of Northumberland, the Committee desire to offer to the subscribers a few words of explanation and acknowledgment. Of the six volumes already issued, three have been devoted to parishes in the southern part of the county, and three to parishes north of the Wansbeck. The present volume belongs to the second of these divisions, and comprises the history of the parishes and chapelries of Edlingham, Bolton, Felton, Framlington, and Brinkburn.

The preparation of the volume has occupied more than two years, during which time the Committee have suffered an irreparable loss by the death of their valued colleague, Mr. C. J. Bates, who, from the inception of the work, had been indefatigable in his efforts to promote and carry out the original design of the undertaking. To a profound and original knowledge of the history of Northumberland from the very earliest times, Mr. Bates added a comprehensive acquaintance with European as well as English history, both ecclesiastical and civil, derived from wide reading added to foreign residence and travel. Imbued with the spirit of the older historians, he spared no labour to secure fidelity of translation, amplitude of detail, and accuracy of description. In addition he possessed a rare and suggestive insight, almost it might be called instinctive, into the heart and inwardness of any subject engaging his attention. By these qualities all his contributions to this work, many and copious as they were, were invariably characterised.

As he has had to acknowledge in former volumes, the editor has gratefully to express his personal obligation to the Duke of Northumberland and the Rev. William Greenwell, for reading each chapter in MS.

before it was sent to the printer. Mr. Greenwell's assistance has lightened and brightened toil, and his cheerful collaboration has been one of the consolations of editorship. To his facile pen is due the account of the great medieval House of Gospatric, occupying no less than ninety-three pages of the volume. To Professor Garwood, as was the case in former volumes, is due the chapter dealing with the geology of the district, and Mr. R. O. Heslop, F.S.A., has written the account of Watling Street.

Mr. W. H. Knowles, F.S.A., has contributed the architectural descriptions, accompanied by plans, of the medieval buildings, ecclesiastical and military, remaining in the district, viz., Brinkburn priory, the churches of Edlingham, Felton, and Framlington, the castle of Edlingham, the towers of Lemington, Overgrass, etc.

Mrs. Hugh Fenwick has contributed substantially to the cost of illustrating Brinkburn. The illustrations throughout the volume have been mostly prepared from drawings made on the spot by Mr. R. S. Bertram, and from photographs taken by Mr. Worsnop and Mr. Joseph Freeman. Mr. W. H. Charlton has given a pen and ink drawing of Weldon-hall, now taken down.

In the interesting but laborious study of the devolution of property, and the transmission of landed estates, generous aid has been afforded by the Duke of Northumberland, Sir John Swinburne, bart., the Dean and Chapter of Durham, Captain Burrell, Mrs. Hugh Fenwick, Dr. J. C. J. Fenwick, Mr. Beresford Lisle, Mr. W. H. Pawson, Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, Mr. John Tate of Newbiggin, Mrs. Charles Thorp, and Mr. S. F. Widdrington, who have given free access to their muniments, and facilitated the work of transcription.

The Rev. C. B. Carr, the Rev. J. M. Russell, and the Rev. F. H. Waller have permitted full and free access to the parish registers of Framlington, Edlingham, and Felton, and have given valuable help and assistance in other ways, as have also Mr. R. L. Allgood, the Rev. E. Barnett, Mr. G. F. Boyd, Mr. Oswin Charlton, Mr. T. E. Forster, Mr. C. W. S. Goodger, the Rev. P. T. Lee, the Rev. R. C. Macleod, Mr. Robert Middlemas, Mr. Richardson of the Newcastle Free Library, Mr. H. B. Thompson, Mr. T. W. Thompson, Mr. T. A. Thorp, the Rev. William Thorp, Mr. H. M. Wood, Mr. Robert Wrigley, Mr. Stephen Sanderson, Clerk of the Peace for Northumberland, and others. By their co-operation, the descent of local families, always a fascinating but at the same time a difficult department of county history, has been rendered clear, concise, and, it is hoped, accurate. Fifty-six pedigrees in the present volume testify to the value of their services.

The editor desires to express his personal obligation to the members of the Committee who have read his proofs, and to Mr. Cuthbert Riddell and Mr. Thomas Tate, and others, who have rendered similar service.

The Committee have to express their great regret at the retirement of Mr. Crawford Hodgson from the post of honorary editor. He has occupied that position for eight years, and under his superintending care four volumes have been produced. The approval bestowed upon these volumes by the subscribers to the History, and the favourable opinion of an outside critical judgment, amply testify to the ability, industry, and painstaking labour which Mr. Hodgson has devoted to them. The relationship between the Committee and the editor has been of the most cordial and agreeable kind, and his resignation will be a personal loss to every member with whom he has been associated during the tenure of his office. This will, however, be to some extent relieved by the active interest which, as one of the Committee, Mr. Hodgson will still apply to the work.

A

EDLINGHAM, FELTON AND BRINKBURN.

THE district proposed to be dealt with in the following pages comprises the two ancient parishes of Edlingham and Felton, with their respective chapelries of Bolton and Framlington, and the chapelry or extra-parochial place of Brinkburn. It embraces an area of above 52 square miles, and extends from East Bolton on the confines of Eglington parish for 14 miles southward to the southern boundary of Eshott, with a greatest width of $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Acton on the east to an affluent of the Coquet called the Black burn on the confines of Rothbury parish. It is divided into two unequal portions by the beautiful Coquet, fully described in a former volume, and on the northern side of the river is the rolling Rimside moor, asserted by the old stage-coach drivers to be the coldest and bleakest part of the journey from Newcastle to Coldstream, being only exceeded by the next stage near the Pow burn, where the winds sweep down from the Cheviots through the valley of the Breamish.

GEOLOGY.

The rocks which occupy the portion of the county dealt with in the present volume include representatives of nearly every division of the Carboniferous series in Northumberland, from the Coal-measures on the south-east near Chevington station, down to the Rothbury beds of the lower Tuedian or Cement-stone group on the west. The following table shows the beds developed in the district:—

	Post-glacial	{	Alluvium and river terraces. Peat bogs and old lake beds.
	Glacial	{	Sands, gravels and kames. Cheviot drift. Northumberland boulder clay.
	Upper Carboniferous	{	Coal-measures and millstone grit.
Lower Carboniferous	Bernician	{	Calcareous division. Carbonaceous division.
	Tuedian	{	Fell sandstone group. Cement stones.

In the district under review there is a strange and unusual coincidence between the parish boundaries and their geological structure, especially in its northern portion. Thus the eastern boundary, from the river Aln to Glantlees, practically coincides with the outcrop of the highest beds of the Fell sandstone series, while the western boundary is roughly parallel to and almost coincides with a large fault which enters the district near Windy Marsh on Rimside moor and runs north-north-east to the Edlingham burn, near Shipley moor. This fault is an important feature in the district, as it runs parallel to the strike of the beds and causes a repetition of the Fell sandstone series, giving it a wider outcrop than would otherwise be the case. In the Felton and Long Framlington districts, however, the boundaries are much more arbitrary. In the northern portion the beds belong chiefly to the Fell sandstone group which give rise, on account of their comparative durability, to the range of hills forming the water-parting between the southern tributaries of the Aln (the Edlingham burn and the Coe burn), and the northern feeders of the Coquet (the Swarland burn, the Mere burn and others). Thus, while the surplus water from the Black-lough flows to the Coquet by Newton burn, the drainage from the neighbouring peat bog to the south finds its way into the Aln by Widehope and Edlingham burn.

These Fell sandstone beds, dipping to the south-east and forming an escarpment to the north-west, pass out of the district in a westerly direction on Long Framlington common, to form the Rothbury and Simonside hills. These beds form the highest ground in this part of Northumberland, rising to 820 feet at Cloudy Crag, 708 feet at Townlaw Cairn, 885 feet at Bigge's-pillar, and 1,010 feet at Shirlah Pike on Long Framlington common, close to the western boundary of the parish. This point, together with Long Crag, 1,047 feet, just outside Edlingham parish, form the highest points in Northumberland east of a line running north and south through Rothbury. The Fell sandstone series is not rich in fossils, and those which do occur are chiefly remains of plants. Among them an interesting new species, Lepidodendron Harcourtii, was discovered by a former rector of Rothbury in these grits near Hesleyhurst, while the sandstone overlying the Debdon coal contains examples of another large species.

The beds belonging to the Carbonaceous division are not well seen here except in the neighbourhood of Alnwick moor, and the name is not a happy one for this district. The lower beds of the calcareous division enter the district at Glantlees and strike across country in a south-westerly direction to Pauperhaugh on the Coquet, while the upper limit of the series runs from Mouldshaugh by East Thirston and Wintrick to the south-east boundary of Bockenfield township near Helm. Five well-marked limestones crop out from place to place in this area, namely, the Fell Top, Little, Great, Four-fathom and Five-yard. The three lower beds occupy a narrow strip less than a mile wide between Newton and Brinkburn. Owing, however, to the thick deposit of drift, these beds only appear on the surface in isolated patches, to wit, a small outcrop in the neighbourhood of Brinkburn and Swarland burn respectively, and a larger spread between Overgrass and Newton. These beds, where exposed, yield a fair assemblage of characteristic fossils. The best locality is in the neighbourhood of the old Brinkburn ironworks.

Here the Four-fathom or Eight-yard Limestone contains good examples of the characteristic Saccamina Carteri, from which it derives its name of the 'spotted post.' 'Specimens of this generally occur thickly clustered together, but sometimes they are scattered more sparsely through the limestone. Where a rock is freshly broken, they appear as round, shining bodies, varying somewhat in size, the largest being about an eighth of an inch in diameter. On weathered pieces of limestone they stand out from the surface, and are then seen to be slightly pointed; sometimes two or more are attached to each other by their pointed ends.' In this district also, but more especially in the neighbourhood of Alnwick, we find remains of the rare annelid, Serpulites carbonarius. Most of the fossils occur in the limestones, but some are found in the shales. At the base of Brinkburn ironstone shale there is a fossiliferous band called the 'cockle-shell bed.' 'Some fragments may be found in the waste heap which lies by the limestone quarry about one-third of a mile north of New Houses, and nearly the same distance west of Healey Cote. Three or four species of brachiopoda and a coral occur here, but the most interesting fossil is a trilobite which was first discovered (in Northumberland) by the late Mr. G. Tate at the Farne Islands, and was by him called Griffithides Farnensis. At present this trilobite is not known to occur south of Brinkburn, but it has been found in Scotland.'¹ The limestone exposed in the quarry by the waste heap is the Eight-yard Limestone. Fossils also occur in the impure limestone known as the 'Red Bed,' to the west of the Coquet, and the interesting form, Psidonomya Becheri, also occurs in several of the shale-beds beneath the Shilbottle coal, near the base of the calcareous division. The coals associated with these limestones have been extensively worked in the district, especially the Shilbottle coal, which underlies the Six-yard Limestone, and also the seam associated with the Great Limestone above, old pits being frequently found dotted along the outcrop of both of these seams.

The first recorded colliery sinking at Newton was in 1804; here a seam of coal, 2 feet 9 inches, was met with below the Great Limestone, at a depth of 184 feet from the surface. Other records are preserved of borings in the Hunter or Dyke Head pit in 1835.² Here it is the Shilbottle seam which is worked at a depth of 300 feet. In this boring the coal is said to occur immediately below the Little Limestone, but this is evidently a mistake, as the Four-fathom and Six-yard Limestone were pierced in the boring before the seam was reached. In Long Framlington colliery,³ and all sections in this district, a small limestone bed, 15 inches to 18 inches thick, puts in about 20 feet to

³ The new pit now working at Long Framlington is 82 fathoms or 492 feet from the surface to the Shilbottle seam, 2 feet 9 inches thick. See inf. Mr. T. E. Forster

25 feet below the Six-yard Limestone, which is locally called 'Little Limestone,' but is quite distinct from the bed of this name situated above the Great Limestone. The coal beneath this limestone does not appear to have been worked within the limits of the district under notice, but old pits are found immediately to the south of Thorney-haugh, and the seam has been extensively worked in the neighbourhood of Chirm. It was the water from this seam which formed the Wingates Spa, an account of which was published in 1792 by Dr. S. Davidson of Rothbury; the source of supply was ultimately destroyed by the workings in the colliery, and the spa is now dry. Ironstone was worked until a few years ago at Brinkburn. This ironstone occurs in the form of concretionary bands in the Shale overlying the Six-yard Limestone, 60 feet above the Shilbottle coal. Iron must also have been formerly worked on the moors in the Fell sandstone ranges in the north and west, where old slag heaps are frequently met with, which may possibly be of Roman age. The beds belonging to the Millstone Grit and Coal-measures call for no special mention, as they are continuous with those described in the fifth volume of this work.

No outcrop of the Great Whin Sill occurs in this portion of the county, though it is found immediately to the south of Ward's Hill, and reappears to the east, near Newton burn, the south end of the Alnwick range. In the former of these exposures it is associated with the Great Limestone; in the latter, at Freeman's Hill, it appears to be situated low down in the Bernician beds somewhere in the Carbonaceous division, but the beds are so drift-covered and so much disturbed to the south-east of Alnwick, that the exact horizon of the beds associated with the basalt is difficult to determine. The Whin must, however, underlie the district somewhere along a line joining Glantlees and Pauperhaugh, though there seems to be no record of the rock having been met with in any of the colliery shafts in the neighbourhood.

The only Whin Dyke which enters the parishes under review is the well known Acklington Dyke, exposed in the bank of the Coquet, half-a-mile to the south of Brainshaugh, and again further west between Swarland and Swarland Park; it crosses the outcrop of the limestone beds at Besom Inn, where it dies out, but it reappears to the north and also to the south at Debdon Mill.

As previously mentioned, the greater part of the lower ground in these parishes is thickly covered with drift, to which must be added the alluvium deposited by the principal rivers draining the district. As a typical section of the drift, we may take a deposit recorded from a sinking (the John pit) for the Long Framlington colliery.

From what has been said in the fifth volume of this work, it would appear that the first two items in the above section may be considered as alluvium, the three succeeding as belonging to the Cheviot drift, while the lower 18 feet with glacial boulders will probably represent the Northumberland boulder clay.

The recent river deposits include numerous patches of old river terraces, and, in places, what appear to be small Lake deposits of fine clay. One of these at Thirston, close to the south end of Felton bridge, was worked for fire-clay from about 1650 up to 1780. The raw material was carried on the backs of ponies to Newcastle and to Howdon Pans, to be used for the making of retorts for the glass houses, but was eventually superseded by the cheaper ballast clay brought by ships.

THE DEVIL'S CAUSEY.

The western portion of the townships comprised in this volume is intersected by the track of a military way, forming what is called the eastern branch of Watling Street in Northumberland. On its way north it passes through Brinkburn (South), Long Framlington and Edlingham, and its course throughout these townships is more or less distinct.

Before particularising its local features, it may be well to note its relation to other lines of communication, as well as the general character and purpose of the causeway. To do this it will be necessary to extend somewhat the scope of observation.

Its common name is the Devil's Causey. Near the Roman Wall it is popularly known as Cob's (or Cobb's) Causey, and the name 'Cob' is supposed by country people to be the name of a giant.¹ Both names connect the origin of the road itself with the work of a supernatural being; and it is believed to have been constructed by diabolic or, at least, mysterious agency. Nor need this credulity cause surprise when it is considered that for generations the road has been regarded as a freak; its persistence in ascending heavy and almost impracticable gradients and in traversing vast wastes, leading nowhere, seems incomprehensible, and may sufficiently explain the belief in its supernatural origin. A loop, connecting its southern extremity with the Stanegate at Walwick Chesters (Cilurnum),² is known as the Caryl Gate (Carlisle Street), a name also applied to the riverside road leading from Newcastle by Howford to the Stanegate.

The Devil's Causey leaves the main line of Watling Street at or near Beuckley, one mile and a half north of Portgate on the Roman Wall.³ From this, Watling Street continues on its way to High Rochester (Bremenium), in a north-westerly direction, and the Causey takes a north-east course until near Brinkburn, when it bears to the north, until it strikes the Tweed near Berwick. Its length from Beuckley to the Tweed is 55 miles 6 furlongs.⁴

Its continuity has been interrupted in places, especially on river banks and where tillage has ploughed out all trace of it; but it is conspicuous for considerable distances in other parts, and, even where grass-grown, or hardly visible above the surrounding moorland, it is still to be traced, so that it is clearly shown to be a branch road from Watling Street, connected by a loop, as we have seen, with the line of the Wall at Cilurnum, and so with the Stanegate to the west.

Further north, a cross road leaving High Rochester on the east connected that outpost with the Devil's Causey at Thrunton.

¹ 'It has the name of Cob Causeway, perhaps from cobble-stones, with which the foundation has been laid.' MacLauchlan, Survey of the Eastern Branch of Watling Street, 1864, p. 1. This supposition is not only incompatible with local tradition but with the fact that the road pavement is of hewn stone, not of 'cobble,' or waterworn, stones.

³ See vol. iv. of this work, p. 217.

⁴ MacLauchlan, supra, p. 48.

The width of the Causey was about 25 feet.¹ This would allow ample space for traffic in Roman times, as may be seen by an examination of the wheel tracks and the clearance allowed in the gateways of the stationary camps.² The Devil's Causey is considerably wider than the Maiden Way in the valley of the South Tync.³

The road bed of the Devil's Causey was regularly built—'paved,' says Horsley, 'with pretty large stones'⁴—with a ditch on each side, still distinctly visible.⁵ Mr. Hodgson says: 'It is a rough pavement between two rows of stones larger than the rest, and apparently having a row of larger stones all along its middle.'⁶ This concurrent testimony and the present aspect of the causeway sufficiently attest a carefully planned structure intended for permanent service, and its character appears to leave no doubt of its Roman origin. Its origin is still more clearly shown when it is viewed in connection with the system of Roman road communication, of which it forms so important a member.

Horsley hesitated to acknowledge it to be Roman because of the absence of important military stations on its route and from the low appearance of the roadway.⁷ Mr. Hodgson, however, supposed that, in accordance with a usual custom, the Romans may have levelled their camps if compelled to evacuate the district, to prevent the natives from using them.⁸ With regard to the objection that the present appearance of the road shows so little above the surface, it may be said that, under conditions seen elsewhere, it might well have been entirely buried.⁹ There can be little doubt that on its original construction the agger of the causeway throughout stood well above the level of the adjacent ground. Notwithstanding his hesitation, Horsley observes: 'I know no

The gateway of the porta principalis at Amboglanna measures 11 feet 2 inches, and that of the east gate 10 feet 3 inches, between the entrance pillars. Ibid. pp. 66-7.

Roman military way that it resembles so much as those causeys which accompany the Roman walls both in England and Scotland.¹ 'This opinion,' adds Hodgson, 'favours the conjecture that it was made by Agricola's army.'² The careful surveys of the Causeway from end to end made by Mr. Henry MacLauchlan, by direction of the then duke of Northumberland, in the years 1857-8-9, have established the Roman character of the work.

The system of road communication towards the northern frontiers of the Roman empire is found in the first, second and fifth iters of the Antonine itinerary. The compilation of the data accumulated in this work is attributed to the commencement of the reign of Antoninus Pius, or about A.D. 138.³ This work, however, only gives the main thoroughfares. Iter 1 begins at the northernmost outpost at High Rochester (Bremennium). Iter 2 begins at the Camp of the Scouts at Birrens (Blatum Bulgium). Both lines, passing southward, unite at Catterick Bridge (Cataractonium) in Yorkshire and are continued on one hand to Pretorium, probably on the Humber, and on the other to the seaports on the English channel. The two exploratory camps, at Birrens and High Rochester in Northumberland, are believed to correspond with the limits of the British province at the date of the record. As the itinerary includes the posts throughout the whole Roman empire, and as its routes and distances were based upon the public records, whose files of documents included the journeys of officials, on civil or military duty or the details of a progress by an emperor himself,⁴ it may well be that tables of main roads only are included, or that 'some of the most magnificent specimens of the imperial highways are unnoticed in that document.'⁵ The fact, however, remains that the Devil's Causey is not mentioned therein, and that our knowledge of it is limited to an observation of the road itself and its relation to the whole system of Roman intercommunication.

The Devil's Causey suggests comparison with the branch road in the county of Durham, connecting Watling Street with the Roman stationary camp at South Shields (Cæs Urfe); Ostium Tynae fluminis, quod Tynemutha dicitur.⁶ The offshoot from Watling Street leading from Binchester (Vinovium) to Newcastle (Pons Aelii), again branches eastward from the crest of the hill at Eighton, where its traces appear in the Leam, or Wrekendike.¹ There is reason to suppose that the Venerable Bede had an itinerary of the Wrekendike before him when he wrote his history.² It may be that this itinerary was of ancient origin, and that it was by no means a solitary example of a road book of the Roman by-ways extant as late as the eighth century.

In the absence of documentary reference to the Devil's Causey, appeal has been made to the fictitious document, the so-called Richard of Cirencester's De Situ Britanniae. It presents an alluring supply of information on this obscure topic, but closer examination exposes its imposture.³

The comparison just made between the Durham Wrekendike and the Devil's Causey shows the manner of keeping Watling Street in touch with the seaboard by oblique lines of communication. There is another point. These two branch ways are respectively identified in name with the Icenhilde weg and Erming Street. 'Wrakendike,' so called as early as the thirteenth century,⁴ is referred to in the next century as the terminal portion of Rickeneld Streete.⁵ The Devil's Causey, in like manner, is identified in name with Erming Street.⁶ These, with the Foss and Watling Street,⁷ were the four great roads protected by the king's peace in time of the Confessor, a privilege confirmed by the Conqueror. The desire to couple the names of roads with those of the favoured 'Four Ways' would be a natural one.

The main road of Watling Street continues past High Rochester, crossing the Cheviot range at an altitude of 1,640 feet, descending on its northern or Scottish face, and placing the mountain chain between it and the seaboard. A permanent line of communication, in Roman times, along the eastern face of this lofty line of hills must have been a military necessity, and this is exactly met by the course pursued by the Devil's Causey.

Its north-east course from Beuckley has been already described. It veers northward as it approaches the township of Brinkburn (South), and continues more or less in the same direction for nine miles, through the townships of Long Framlington and Edlingham. In approaching the valley of the Coquet from the south, the Causeway descends rapidly for three miles, from a height of 500 feet above sea-level on Todburn moor, whence it slopes, in a course parallel to the Tod burn, and approaches the river across the 200 feet contour line. The exact point of its passage across the Coquet is uncertain; the changing course of the stream having obliterated all trace. But the line is visible in the gradient beyond, Brinkburn bearing 'about 1,300 yards west of the place where the Causeway crosses the river.'¹

From the Coquet northward the Causeway rises through the fields on the opposite bank on a gradient steeper even than its descent on the southward side; and at a distance of two and a half miles from the river it reaches an altitude of 564 feet, at an ordnance bench mark half a mile west of Long Framlington. As the Causeway dips toward the burn beyond, it joins with the 'Old North Road' from Newcastle to Edinburgh, the two running together for a mile and more.² An eminence called Hall Hill, a fortified post, described in 1825 as possessing a triple entrenchment,³ is conjectured to be of Roman origin. Mr. MacLauchlan admits, with doubt, the evidence of the Roman character of the works.⁴ A conjecture that it might possibly have been the Alauna Amnis of Richard's itinerary must be discarded for reasons mentioned above.

Before reaching Knogley, on Long Framlington Common, the present road divides and the right branch skirts the six hundred feet contour line; both forks avoiding the eminence immediately in front. But the Causeway keeps right on to the summit, crossing the boundary line between Long Framlington and Edlingham townships at a height of over seven hundred feet above the datum line. Its course is plainly visible. Not far from Knogley, iron-furnace slag is found, the scoriae of an ancient bloomery, or bole-hill, possibly Roman.

The course of the Causeway as it descends, after entering Edlingham township, is obscure for a mile or so. It must have followed a direction nearly parallel to the burn, for the line is resumed immediately below the demesne lying to the west of Edlingham, but considerably to the east of the course it holds up to that point. Three-quarters of a mile west of Edlingham village, and six hundred yards west of the Causeway, stands a camp, on a commanding elevation, near Newtown. It is 'quadrangular, if not rectangular,' in form; Mr. MacLauchlan supposes it to be Roman.¹

Between High Learchild and Low Learchild the Causeway makes a sharp bend westward, coming well into view once more, 'with a ditch on each side, still very distinctly visible.'² It then resumes its northerly direction, running on straight for the Tweed. Between the northern boundary of Edlingham township and Thrumton, just beyond Learchild, the western Roman way from High Rochester joins the Causeway, having for some distance flanked its western side, thus linking it again with Watling Street.

In its later course, and by way of the westward turn above referred to, the Devil's Causey appears to have been engineered to effect a gentler gradient, in marked contrast to its usual character up to this point. The circumstance is more observable because of the opposite feature exemplified in the heavy gradient of the adjacent modern turnpike. Of the latter it was observed: 'One great objection to some of these roads is, the many steep banks they are disgraced with.' 'It seems the original setters-out of these roads had a predilection for climbing and descending steep banks. This is notorious on both the roads upon Rimside moor, without even the plea of being nearer; as the leveller road would have been nearer, travelled in much less time, and with far less fatigue.'³ Another writer says: 'What renders this instance of the sapience of our old road surveyors more striking is, that, by skirting the east side of Rimside hill, the road might have been easily formed upon the remains of a Roman military way.¹ Yet another writer denounces the 'intolerable roads and frightful moors,' as they appeared here in the eighteenth century.² The contrast is singular; for the military causeway, to this point, has kept an almost undeviating line up hill and down. Here, however, it grades with comparative ease along a contour line. The reason seems to be the cover on the left hand afforded by the road approaching from Bremennium, which led the Roman engineer for once to discard his usual precaution.

As the old north road crosses the track just followed another contrast is suggested. The year 1763 saw the first coach connection from London to Edinburgh through Newcastle, Wooler and Kelso rendered practicable by the new road then recently completed. From this date we may look back 1,500 years to find during the Roman occupation of Britain a perfect system of main and branch roads ramifying in every direction; the main lines furnished with posting stations, indicated in distance tables for the traveller, and guarded by scouts picketed at intervening defiles. It was then possible to travel from Edlingham to London on the Roman paved way with the utmost speed, and to proceed thence to the coast, there to embark at any of the three ports where heavily oared galleys waited their passengers: to pass through Gaul, by similarly built roads, from post to post, and, so, on to Rome itself. Thus we read the Antonine itinerary. But after the Romans abandoned Britain an interval of 1,340 years elapsed before such quick and complete communication was again available.

The Rev. John Hodgson, basing his opinion on the remarks of Horsley, favours the conjecture that this Causeway was one of the oldest of the Roman works in these parts.³ If this be a correct surmise we have been treading here in the footsteps of Vespasian's general, Cnæus Julius Agricola. No greater contrast could be made than a realization of the stir and stress accompanying the march of the conqueror compared with the now desolation of the moors traversed by the causeway. Its pavement is in many parts green with the growth of centuries, where it has remained disused; and so it has remained an object of wonderment, if not of dread, as the Devil's Causey.

EDLINGHAM PARISH.

The parish of Edlingham, comprising an area of 12,545 acres, is bounded on the north and north-west by the parish of Eglington, on the east by Alnwick, on the south by Framlington and Rothbury, and on the west by Whittingham and Eglington. It is divided into six townships, of which Edlingham, Learchild and Lemington are members of the barony of Gospatric,¹ while Bolton, with Broom-park and Abberwick, are detached manors belonging to the barony of Wark-on-Tweed.² It has a greatest length from north to south of eight miles, with a width of from three to four miles.

THE HOUSE OF GOSPATRIC.

The earliest notice of Edlingham occurs in Simeon's History of the Church of Durham, where, under the form Eadulfingham, it is found associated with the adjoining Eglington (Ecgwulfingham), among the places given to Saint Cuthbert, in 737, by King Ceolwulf, when, resigning the throne, he became a monk at Lindisfarne. Ceolwulf had also given Bregesne (possibly Brainshagh) and Werceworde (Warkworth), at which place he had built a church. It does not appear that he had built a church at any of the other four villas he gave to St. Cuthbert, namely, Wudecestre (Woodhorn or Wooden at the mouth of the Aln), Hwittingaham (Whittingham), Edlingham and Eglington.³ The churches at these places, according to the writer of the 'Recapitulatio' of Symeon's History, were consecrated by Bishop Egred (831-847).

The theory of John Mitchell Kemble,² that place-names, into whose composition the syllable 'ing' enters, had a patronymical origin, being the settlement of a family or stock, has not been maintained by a more careful examination and scientific study of the numerous instances where such names occur. In the case of Edlingham, however, the site may almost certainly be regarded as the ham, the homeplace, of a community of Angles, the relatives and dependents of a man called Eadwulf. There was at Bamburgh a family who claimed a royal descent, and who persistently carried on the name of their ancestor Eadwulf from generation to generation, as they also transmitted their high rank and important position among the officials of the earldom.¹ It is not improbable that the man who gave his name to Edlingham was one of the Bamburgh Eadwulfs, nor is it impossible that the great house of Gospatric, whose principal branch afterwards became the lords of the serjeanty of Beanley, of which Edlingham was a member, may have been related to the family of Eadwulf and so may have had an earlier connection with the place than that given them by the grant of Henry I.

Edlingham must have been occupied in prehistoric days, for it possesses advantages for settled habitation in all respects equal to those of the surrounding districts, where the discovery of stone and bronze weapons and implements, and the occurrence of fortified strongholds and of places of burial bear testimony to an abundant population in those times. Nothing, however, in the shape of weapon or implement has been recorded as having been found there, nor have any prehistoric burials either of burnt or unburnt bodies been noticed within the limits of the parish.

Besides the name of the place itself, nothing speaks of an owner until it is found in possession of the family of Gospatric, ultimately earls of Dunbar and March. With a great Celtic origin, allied to the line of the Scottish kings by the marriage of his grandfather Crinan the Thane, hereditary lay-abbot of Dunkeld, with Bethoc, the heir of her father Malcolm II., the first Gospatric added to that descent the blood of the royal stock of Wessex through the marriage of his father Maldred with Alghitha, daughter of Earl Uchtred, by his wife Elfgiva (Ælfgifu), daughter of Ethelred II.,² king of England.³

² The ordinary spelling of names of persons has been retained as far as possible. This may not commend itself to those who demand that the strictly etymological form should be adopted, but is one which seems to be more conformable to the requirements of a work which appeals to the general reader.

³ Symeon, ibid., vol. ii, p. 199. Symeon of Durham, ed. Hodgson-Hinde, Surt. Soc., p. 92.

The name Gospatric (Gwas Patric, servant of Patric) was not at the time uncommon, but Gospatric, the son of Maldred, probably got it from his mother's half brother, the son of Earl Uchtred by Sigen, daughter of Styr the son of Ulf, who was treacherously killed in 1064 at the king's court by command of Queen Edith (Eadgith), for the sake of her brother Tosti.¹ A story much to the credit of Gospatric, the son of Maldred, when he was young, if it refers to him, is told by the author of one of the Lives of Edward the Confessor. When Earl Tosti, with the new archbishop of York, Aldred, and others, were returning from a pilgrimage to Rome in 1061, and were attacked by robbers, Gospatric, to save Tosti from capture, declared himself to be the earl.² The youth, however, may have been Gospatric, the son of Uchtred, killed three years later at the instigation of Queen Edith.

Though Gospatric was not in the direct line of hereditary descent, for his mother, a daughter of Earl Uchtred, was by his third marriage, and there were descendants by his first wife, Eefrida, daughter of Bishop Aldhun,³ he was made earl of Northumberland by King William, to whom he had made a large payment of money for the office.⁴ This took place towards the end of the year 1067, possibly at Christmas, when the earldom was vacant by the murder of Copsi,⁵ a trusted and prudent councillor of Earl Tosti, who had become earl on February 4th of the same year, by the deprivation of Oswulf.⁶ Oswulf seems not only to have been deprived of the earldom but outlawed, for it is said that he lay hid, in hunger and poverty, in the woods and mountains, where he gathered together a band of men in a condition similar to his own. With these, on March 11th, 1067, he surprised Copsi when feasting at Newburn on the Tyne, and on his taking refuge in the church it was set on fire, and Copsi, attempting to escape, was beheaded at the door by Oswulf, who himself not long afterwards was slain by the lance thrust of a robber.⁷

Gospatric did not long remain faithful to the king from whom he had obtained the earldom, for in 1068 he took part in a conspiracy against William in the interest of Edgar the Etheling, and the restoration of an English king. The rising at first made great headway, and beyond the Humber there was the most intense disturbance; all places, woods, marshes, river-mouths and towns were fortified. York, the great city of the North, was in a white heat of passion, which the pious zeal of the Archbishop Aldred, in vain strove to suppress. This powerful insurrection, though it included among its supporters the two Mercian earls, Edwin and Morker, and the great northern lords, Arkill the Thegn, Merlesweyn, Gospatric, and others of lesser note, speedily came to naught. Edwin and Morker betrayed the cause of their English brethren, and William advanced without opposition to York, where the keys of the city were delivered to him by the citizens, who had lost hope of a successful resistance. Arkill, the greatest power of the Northumbrians, made his peace, giving his son as a hostage, and Bishop Ethelwin of Durham, coming to York, intervened between William and Malcolm, king of Scotland, and brought them to conclude a treaty of peace.¹ Gospatric fled into Scotland in company with the Etheling, his mother and sisters, and many others, including Merlesweyn. He appears to have had the earldom then taken from him, but the accounts given of the circumstances are not clear. It is, however, certain that in January, 1069, William appointed Robert of Comines (Cumin) to a position of such authority, that if it was not officially the earldom, it was possessed of many of its powers.² It is, however, possible that his authority, as Orderic states, extended only northwards as far as the Tyne. Robert Cumin at once set out with what proved to be an insufficient body of followers to bridle the rebellious North. On his approaching Durham he was warned by the bishop, Ethelwin, that it would not be safe to occupy the town. It would have been well if Cumin had followed the prudent advice of the bishop, who had local knowledge of the mind and intentions of the people. He entered the city and at first there was no disturbance, but he acted with folly and his men with cruelty, and the next morning, January 31st, the men of Northumberland broke down the gates, and attacked Robert in the bishop's house; it was set on fire, and with the exception of one or two, for the accounts differ, the earl and all his people were slain.¹

The discontent and turbulent condition of the North still continued, and in the latter part of the year 1069, a fleet which had been sent by the Danish king (Sweyn), with a large body of men under the command of his sons and his brother Osbern, to invade and conquer England,² after harassing the eastern coast without much success, entered the Humber.³ It was there joined by a fleet bringing Edgar the Etheling, and many other banished Englishmen from Scotland. To these were added numerous members of great English houses, among them Waltheof, son of Siward, earl of Northampton and Huntingdon, and the men of Northumberland with Gospatric at their head. For a time the invasion was successful, and York, after it had been set on fire by the garrisons of its two castles, was taken by assault on September 21st, 1069. King William was at the time in the west of England, where, as well as on the Welsh borders, there had been a formidable and widespread insurrection against him, which, to a great extent, had been subdued. When the fall of York became known to him he rapidly advanced northwards, and found the city deserted by the allied force of Danes and English.⁴ William at once commenced to put down the rebellion by such widespread and complete devastation as has scarcely ever been surpassed. An appalling picture of the desolation of the burnt up and mined land, and of the misery of its wretched and starving inhabitants is given by the Chroniclers.⁵

Gospatric, though not present in person, took the oath of allegiance by proxy, and made his peace with King William, as Waltheof, the son of Siward, had already done personally.⁶ The king was at the time passing fifteen days near the mouth of the river Tees, where he had come, after a most harassing march through the hills of Cleveland, to put down a body of insurgents entrenched on what they thought was an impregnable position, which, however, they abandoned during the night before William arrived.¹ This took place in December, 1069, when Gospatric, now in the king's favour, was reinstated in the earldom. Whether it was regranted or not is uncertain. It appears doubtful if he had ever been actually deprived of it, in spite of what is said about Robert Cumin having been appointed earl just before his death. Anyhow, during all the time in question, the great stronghold of Bamburgh, the centre of the earldom, was in the possession of Gospatric, though it might have been held against the will of the king. William was not then sufficiently strong in his hold on the northern parts of England to warrant his coming to an issue with a great landowner so powerful as Gospatric, who also possessed much influence with the English. But he bided his time.

Whilst Gospatric was making his submission to William, Bishop Ethelwin and the congregation of St. Cuthbert, fearing for their own safety and that of their church, on the 11th of December, 1069, had fled from Durham, carrying with them the body of the saint, to take refuge at Lindisfarne.² This proceeding, we are told, was strongly urged upon them by Gospatric, who, we are further told, on the pretext of saving them, had carried off the greater part of the ornaments of the church.³ In connection with this journey of Bishop Ethelwin and his brethren, who spent the first night at Jarrow, in the church of St. Paul, the second at Bedlington, and the third at Tuggal, Simeon tells a picturesque story which probably contains an element of truth. When on their journey they had reached the north side of the Tyne, they came in conflict with a great man in those parts named Gillomichael, the servant (puer) of Michael, who, as the narrator says, would more fitly have been styled the servant of the Devil. He inflicted many injuries on them, hindering them in their journey and otherwise afflicting and plundering them, doing them all the ill he could. He did not go unpunished. On their arrival at Lindisfarne, an old clerk, Ernan by name, was sent back to Durham to report on the doings there, and on what had happened to the church. Night overtaking him on the road, he laid himself down in a field to sleep, and there had a vision. The narrator tells the story, he says, as he had frequently heard it from the old clerk. Carried in his vision to Durham, Ernan stood in the church, where before the altar

he saw two men of the highest dignity standing with their faces turned towards the east. The one of middle age, habited solemnly in episcopal vestments, who, by his appropriate dress and countenance, honourably commanded reverence, he recognised to be a bishop. The other, who stood on his right side, clothed in a red-coloured garment, was of tall stature, having a face rather long with a slight beard, and had the form of a most beautiful youth. After a time, turning their eyes from the altar to the church, the bishop, as if deeply moved at its desolation, exclaimed 'Woe to thee, Gospatric! Woe to thee, Gospatric! My church thou hast robbed and turned into a desert.' Ernan, anxious to approach them, but fearful of doing so, was addressed by the younger man by his name, and asked if he knew who the bishop was, and on his answering no, he was told it was his lord the holy bishop Cuthbert. Ernan then fell at the bishop's feet and besought him to help his church in her distress. After bowing to the altar the two left it with slow and decorous step. When they came to the door the younger passed on a little in advance, while the bishop stopped in the doorway, and looking back on Ernan, who had stayed behind, said, 'Ernan, knowest thou who that youth is?' and on his answering 'I know not, my lord,' he replied 'He is Saint Oswald.' They then passed on together to the south side of the city, when they halted, and the bishop, calling to Ernan, bid him look below, where he saw a profound deep full of the souls of men. There he saw Gillomichael, tortured with the most fearful pains, lying in the foulest place, cut through in every part with a sharp knife and suffering unbearable torments. The miserable man was shrieking, and emitting without ceasing dread howlings and pitiable cries, with no intervening relief. On St. Cuthbert telling him he was Gillomichael, and that he was suffering these miseries, being dead, Ernan replied that he was not dead, for he had been in his own house that night at supper in health and unhurt, and was expected on the morrow to be at a banquet prepared for him at a certain place. Cuthbert then told him he was truly dead, and that he and those Ernan saw suffering with him were tormented because they had broken his peace and inflicted injury on his people. Ernan then awoke and mounting his horse rode off hurriedly, urging his companions to follow him. When they asked him in wonder why he was in such haste, he told them of the man's death and how he came to know of it. They did not believe him, and jeered at him for his credulity. After journeying all night they turned aside a little from the road to hear mass in a church hard by. The people there, after their wont, asked Ernan for news, and when he told them of the death of Gillomichael, they said it was untrue as they knew that he was well the day before. But presently some of Gillomichael's people arriving, they heard from them that their master had died that night, and on Ernan enquiring at what hour it had happened, he learnt that it was at the same time as that when he had seen him dead, and had been shown him by St. Cuthbert undergoing the terrible sufferings he had witnessed. When afterwards Ernan told Gospatric of these intolerable torments and what the saint had said about him he shook with fear, and presently walking barefoot to the island (Lindisfarne) where the sacred body was, he sought pardon by prayers and gifts for the offences he had committed against him.¹

Shortly after his reconciliation with King William, Gospatric did good service to the king by making an inroad into Cumberland, whence in the same year, 1070, Malcolm, the Scottish king, had invaded England, treating the land and its inhabitants with a barbarity equal to that with which shortly before William had devastated the country farther south. In the course of his invasion Malcolm passed through the valley of the Tees into Cleveland, and thence turning northwards he occupied Hartness, passing into and raiding with much ferocity the patrimony of St. Cuthbert.² He does not appear to have entered Northumberland, where the lands of Gospatric were situated, which possibly he may have spared on account of the intimate relations of blood and of policy existing between them. If this was the case it makes the conduct of Gospatric, in attacking Malcolm's territory of Cumberland, difficult to understand, except that he was influenced by fear of William and the desire to conciliate him.

Malcolm was then at Wearmouth, where he had been joined by Edgar the Etheling, and many of the English who had taken part with the Danes in their unsuccessful invasion. Whilst there, he had burned the church of St. Peter,³ originally erected by Benedict Biscop in 674, of which considerable portions still exist. It had been laid waste during the Danish ravages in 867, but had been partly rebuilt and again occupied before the Norman Conquest. Gospatric had meanwhile returned unopposed from Cumberland, and had carried back with him to Bamburgh the spoil he had acquired there.¹

After his peace had been made with William, Gospatric appears to have remained, at least outwardly, in the king's favour, who appointed him to conduct the new bishop of Durham, Walcher, a native of Lorraine, from York to Durham, where he arrived at mid-lent, 1070.² The selection was a prudent one on the part of William, for Gospatric was not only the earl within whose jurisdiction the see of Walcher was included, but was also the possessor of another and important qualification. The country, though subdued, was still hostile to the Norman rule, and the new bishop as a foreigner would naturally be regarded as an enemy. It was, therefore, most desirable that the goodwill and offices of a man so grateful to the English as Gospatric should be enlisted on his behalf.

But the peace between William and Gospatric was not long maintained. In the year following, 1072, the king, on his return from the successful invasion of Scotland, which ended at Abernethy, where Malcolm completed his submission by acknowledging the English king as his overlord,³ deprived Gospatric of the earldom.⁴

The alleged offences of Gospatric, the alliance with the Danish invaders when York was taken and the Norman garrison massacred, and his complicity with the death of Robert Cumin and his followers at Durham, had been previously condoned by William. The real crime, it can scarcely be doubted, was the personal hold he possessed over the people of Northumberland, joined to his great territorial influence and the doubtful allegiance he had shown towards the king. William, being now in a position strong enough to enable him to act in accordance with the

Gospatric, no longer earl, retired to Scotland, to which country, after a voyage to Flanders, he presently returned, when he received from his cousin, Malcolm III., a large grant of land, that, until better times should come, he might provide for himself and his dependents.¹ This grant comprised Dunbar and the great possessions in Lothian and the Merse, with which his descendants in the main line, earls of Dunbar and March, were in future to be principally connected.

Gospatric, when he was deprived of the earldom and had transferred his allegiance to the Scottish king, lost all the lands he held under the king of England. Mr. Freeman, however, was of the opinion that he retained many estates in Yorkshire, and says,² 'Gospatric, though fallen from his ancient wealth and honours, appears in the survey as a considerable landowner.' There is nothing in favour of this view. The person of that name who is found in Domesday was probably Gospatric, the son of Arkel and his wife Sigrida, the grand-daughter of Earl Uchtred and his wife Sigen, daughter of Styr the son of Ulf, and a cousin of Gospatric, son of Maldred. His large possessions in Yorkshire were partly those he had held under King Edward, which he still retained, though at the time of the great survey they were principally held by him under a superior lord, many of them under Earl Alan of Brittany. In other cases he held lands which in the time of King Edward had belonged to his father Archil.³

Nothing is recorded of the events of Gospatric's life after he became settled in Scotland, nor does it seem to have been prolonged beyond a few years. It has been generally believed that he was the Earl Gospatric who became a monk at Durham, and there died and was buried. There is no evidence in support of this view, which is discussed later on. A very specific and circumstantial account of his death and burial is given by Roger de Houeden. He states that just before his death Gospatric was visited by two monks from Melrose, Aldwin and Turgot,⁴ to whom, with much penitence, he made confession of his sins. This event took place at Ubbanford, otherwise Norham, most probably in 1074, a time when the two monks were at Melrose. He died at the same time, and was buried in the porch (in ipso ecclesie exitu) of the church there. The same account states that he gave to Aldwin and Turgot two good dorsals on condition that wherever they took up their abode the dorsals should remain in memory of the donor. And now, as the narrator tells us, they are preserved in the church at Durham.¹ They came there in the natural order of events, in accordance with the wish of Gospatric, as the place where Aldwin and Turgot ultimately settled, becoming one after the other prior of the monastery there.

In addition to the lands Gospatric held in Northumberland, which he no doubt forfeited when King William deprived him of the earldom, and when, taking refuge in Scotland, he became the man of King Malcolm, and had from him a grant of the great Lothian fee, he also owned an extensive lordship in Cumberland. He was the lord of Allerdale, a barony which included large estates in the northern part of that county. It is probable he became possessed of that important district by the gift of his relative Malcolm, who held the north of Cumberland under the English king, and that it was given to him at the same time he had a grant of Dunbar from the Scottish king. It was an act of policy on the part of Malcolm, as well as one of kindness to a relation, for the placing a man of Gospatric's power and influence, and who must have been more than ordinarily hostile to the English king, in close proximity to the border of William's kingdom, would be a valuable addition to the strength of Malcolm's position as lord of Cumberland. It has not hitherto been known that Gospatric or any of the family (though Dolfin, son of Gospatric, was the ruler of Carlisle) held any land in Cumberland before the time of Henry I., who, it is stated, made a grant of Altadale (Allerdale) to Waldene, son of Gospatric.

The discovery of an early copy of a deed of gift, made at the end of the eleventh century, by Gospatric, among the muniments at Lowther castle, has shown that view to be incorrect. The evidence which it contains revolutionises to some extent the history of the Norman settlement of Cumberland, though there is nothing in it inconsistent with what was already known. The authenticity of the writing, letter or charter, whichever it may be designated, is undoubted, though the copy at Lowther castle is only of thirteenth century date, and the text is in many places corrupt, and does not appear to contain all the clauses which were in the original.

It has the rare distinction of being a document in English, but the copy shows unmistakable signs of having been made by a scribe, probably a Norman, to whom the wording of the original was more or less unintelligible, and who has in consequence made numerous blunders in the transcript.

The grant has reference entirely to Cumberland, and it is not necessary to discuss here the historical and linguistic questions which arise out of it and make it of such supreme interest and importance. It is the only document at present known which is concerned with Gospatric in his position as a territorial magnate, and in that capacity dealing with the land held by him.

There are some clauses in the letter, such as the reference to Thor, Melmor and Sygulf, as well as to Earl Siward, which seem to point to Gospatric having been more than a mere landowner in Cumbria. Did he hold an official position in some degree approaching that of the holder of an earldom, or was Cumbria then merged in the earldom of Northumberland? So little is known of the history of Cumberland at the time in question that it is perhaps useless to speculate about the matter, but if Gospatric held such an office, as has been suggested, it would account for his son Dolfin having been ruler of Carlisle and for another son, Waldeue, succeeding to Allerdale.

Gospatrik greets all my retainers and each man, free and dreng, who dwell in all the lands that were Commber's, and all my kindred friendly; and I make known to you that my mind and full leave (consent) is, that Thorfinn Mac Thore be as free in all things that are mine in Alnerdall (Allerdale), as any man is—whether I or any of my retainers—in wood, in heath, or fell, in enclosures and as to all things, that are on the earth or below it, at Shauk, and at Wafyr (Waver), and at Polwathoen (Wampool), and at Bek Troyte (Troutbeck), and the wood at Caldebek (Caldbeck); and I will that the men abiding with Thorfinn at Cartheu (Cardew) and Combetheyfoch (Cumbriock), be as free as Melmor and Thore and Sigewulf were in Edred's days, and that there be no man so daring that he—with that I have given to him—cause (?) to break the peace, such as Earl Siward and I have made known to them for ever (?), as any man living under the sky; and whosoever is there abiding let him be as free from geld as I am; and in like manner with Waltheof and Wigand and Wiberht and Gamell and Kenneth (?), and for (?) all my kinsmen and retainers; and I will that Thorfinn have sac and soc, toll and team, over all the lands at Cardew and at Cumdivock that were given to Thore in Moryn's days, free with bode (proclamation, precept) and witnessmen in the same place.¹

The name of Gospatric's wife and her parentage are unknown. He had three sons, Dolfin, Waldene, and Gospatric, and four daughters, Etheldreda, Octreda, Gunnilda, and Matillis.

Gospatric's three sons usually appear in the order of Dolfin, Waldeue or Waltheof, and Gospatric.² Gospatric, however, is sometimes placed second in the list. Dolfin seems to have been the eldest, and it is possibly due to his position in the family, though there may have been other reasons for it, that Gospatric generally calls himself, and is also spoken of as the brother of Dolfin. The son of Gospatric the earl has been regarded as the same person as Dolfin, the ruler of Carlisle, in the later part of the eleventh century, a jurisdiction which comprehended the land between the river Derwent and the Solway. There is no proof, however, that Dolfin, the son of Gospatric, was the same as Dolfin of Carlisle, the representative of the authority of Malcolm, king of Scotland, who then held that part of ancient Cumbria as a feudatory of the English king. Dolfin had no doubt received the province of Carlisle from Malcolm, ² This arrangement is followed by the author of 'De obsessione Dunelmi,' Symeon of Durham, vol. i. p. 216, and by the continuator of Symeon, ibid. vol. ii. p. 199.

In a memorandum of about the end of the thirteenth century, which, though it contains many palpable errors, cannot be regarded as being without authority, it is stated: 'That Earl Cospatryk, who once was earl of Dunbar in Scotia, had a brother Dolfin, earl of Northumbria, both of whom were bastards. They had a legitimate brother, by name Wald' (Waldeue), and a legitimate sister Etheldreda, who were of one father and one mother. There came afterwards to England Ranulph de Meschinis with William Bastard the Conqueror, who gave to him all the lands from a place called Rere Crosse upon Staynmore as far as the river towards Scotia which is called Sulewaht (Solway). The same Ranulph, who was created eal of Carliol, attached Wald' to himself as an ally, and because he came from Scotia to help him in the war between the Scots and the English, Ranulph gave him for his service the whole barony of Allerdal from a place called Wahtelpole as far as Derwent, with its appurtenances, saving only to himself his hunting.'³ Record Office, Scottish Documents (Chancery), file 9, No. 3.

and when the cousinship between Malcolm and Gospatric, as well as Gospatric's position in Cumberland, is taken into consideration, there is a strong presumption that the ruler of Carlisle was the son of the earl. The tie of relationship existing between them was doubtless one cause which induced Malcolm to give to Gospatric the great fee of Lothian, and would naturally make him equally disposed to make a son of the earl his lieutenant at Carlisle. Whatever may have been the parentage of Dolfin, he was expelled from his jurisdiction by William Rufus in 1092, who restored and repopled Carlisle,¹ which is said to have been deserted for two hundred years after its destruction by the Danes. King William is also stated to have built a castle there at the same time.² Malcolm, during the course of the preceding year, had made a hostile incursion into England, but had ultimately made submission to William and had sworn allegiance to him.³ This invasion, added to similar actions on the part of Malcolm, probably impelled William to deprive him of Carlisle and the territory he had hitherto held under the English crown.

Waldeue, presumably the second son of Gospatric, succeeded his father in the barony of Eltadale (Allerdale), which was held of the king by the service of cornage.⁴ He does not appear to have had any land in Northumberland, and his grant of four bovates of land and a house for the fishing of herrings in Allerdale, to the priory of Hexham,⁵ may have been due to a kindly feeling originating in his father's connection with the county where his early years had possibly been spent. The name of his wife was Sigrida or Sigarith.⁶ He had two sons, Alan and Gospatric. The latter is described as being a bastard, but he received a competent endowment from his brother, who gave him Boulton

(Bolton), in the forest, Bastenthweit (Bassenthwaite), outside the forest, and Hestholm, in Derwentwater.¹ His son, Waldene, gave the church of Bassenthwaite to the Augustinian canons of St. Mary of Jedburgh.² Alan, son of Waldene, subinfeudated considerable portions of the large fee he inherited from his father.³ He dowered his sisters on their marriage liberally, and he gave to the priory of Carlisle the churches of Yreby (Ireby), Crosby and Aspatrik (Aspatria), and land in various places, and, with the body of his son Waldene, the Holy Rood, which, the compiler of the Chronicon Cumbriae says, they still possess.⁴ With the death of his son Waldeue the descent in the male line came to an end, but before that took place Waldeue had given to the priory of Carlisle the vill of Great Crosby.⁵ The succession ultimately passed to the three sisters of William 'the boy of Egremont,' son of William fitz Duncan, earl of Moray.⁶ Waldeue had two daughters; Gunnild, who married Uchtred, son of Fergus, lord of Galloway, to whom her brother Alan gave Torpenhow in dower. Its church was afterwards given by them, with the consent of their heir, Lochlan, to the canons of Holy Rood at Edinburgh.⁷ The other daughter, Hectreda or Octreda, married first Ranulph de Lindesay, and secondly William de Esseville or de Esseby, and had from her brother for dower Blenrasset (Blennerhasset) and Ucknanby.⁸

Waldeue, son of Gospatric, is said to have become a monk in the abbey at Crowland, where he was appointed prior in 1124.⁹ It seems scarcely probable that he should have entered a monastery so remote from the district with which he was connected, though instances are not uncommon where persons of as high a position as Waldeue assumed the monastic habit. The name was not uncommon at the time, and attached to persons of noble blood, and it is more probable that Waldeue, the abbot of Crowland, was brother to some other Gospatric than the brother of Dolfin.

Raine, North Durham, appendix, p. 25, No. cxi. The first witness is Willelmus filius Duncani, who is followed by Gospatricus filius ejus. There can be no doubt that William, son of Duncan, who witnessed the grant, is the well-known earl of Moray, a frequent witness to charters of King David. He is sometimes described in them as 'nepos regis,' and almost always occupies the same principal place among the witnesses as in the charter in question. His son Gospatric may have died early without issue, or he may not have been legitimate.

In addition to his three sons Gospatric had four daughters, three of whom were adequately endowed on their marriage by their brother Waldeue, their father possibly being dead by that time. Octreda or, as the name is otherwise given, Ethreda, who married Waldeue, son of Gillimin, received Brochton (Broughton), Ribeton and Parva Brochton. To Gunnilda, who married Orm, son of Ketell, he gave Seton, Camberton (Camerton), Flemyngby (Flimby), and Graysowen. Matilla, the wife of Dolphin, son of Aylward, had a grant of Aplewhayt (Applethwaite), Parva Crosby, Langrigg and Brigham, with the advowson of the church there. All these various estates were in Cumberland, and formed portions of the lordship of Allerdale, given to Waldeue by Henry I.¹ The fourth daughter, Etheldreda, otherwise Ethreda or Octreda, made a greater alliance than her sisters when she became the wife of her cousin, Duncan II., king of Scotland.²

There is nothing to show that Gospatric, the brother of Dolphin and son of Gospatric the earl, was possessed of any lands in Northumberland before he was largely endowed by Henry I., unless he had an hereditary right in the land of his uncle Edmund, whatever that may have been, which was granted or perhaps only confirmed to him by Henry when he gave him Beanley. In making this grant the king was probably influenced by motives of policy. It was certainly advantageous to him to attach by a feudal tie, as also by self-interest, a man of great possessions, who held a high position in an adjoining kingdom so constantly at war with his own as was Scotland. Anyhow, King Henry made him a large landowner in Northumberland. There is no original charter or copy of one extant containing the grant of Beanley by Henry, but its terms are recited in a confirming charter by Stephen, made at York about 1135, a record of exceeding interest.¹ It grants to Gospatric, brother of Dolfin, the land of his uncle Edmund, held of King Henry, and in addition the land of Winnoch, elsewhere called the hunter (venator), to wit, six manors, Bremdona (Brandon), Benelega (Beanley), Hiddesleie (Hedgley), Bremetona (Branton), Thitilistona (Titlington), and Harop (Harehope), with all the men and goods which were on the land when King Henry gave the manors to Hamo; and the land of Liulf, son of Octred (Liulf, son of Uchtred), to wit, the three Mideltonas, Rodon (Roddam), Horsleia, the service of Gospatric, Stanton, Wyndegate, Wottona (Long Witton), Wittona (Nether Witton), and Rittona, as King Henry gave them to him by his charters. He is to have his proper boundaries, to which he shall be able to prove his right; and all the usual appurtenances, which are specifically set out, with soc and sac, toll and theam, and infangthef, as fully and as freely as ever he held them in the time of King Henry; and above this all rights of chase belonging to his fee (et super hoc omnes fugationes quae feudo suo pertinent). The last clause may be an additional right granted by Stephen himself. This grant has been regarded, and is sometimes officially described, as of the barony of Beanley. It does not, however, in the nature of the services fulfil the ordinary obligations of such a fee. It was not held by knight's service or by any other service incidental to a barony, but really in grand serjeanty, as in some records it is described. According to two inquisitions held in relation to the lands of Patric, earl of Dunbar,² the great-grandson of Gospatric, the only service with which the fee was burdened, was that the holder should be 'inborwe' and 'utborwe,' as it is written in one inquisition, 'inborg' and 'hutborg' in the other, between England and Scotland.³

He also held three knight's fees in theynage, given by Henry I., by the payment of 30s. Red Book of the Exchequer, ed. Hall, vol. ii. p. 562. For other evidence connected with the serjeanty of Beanley, etc., see Inq. p.m. 20 Edw. I. No. 164. It may be of interest to note that the earls of Dunbar were proverbially said 'to carry the keys of the Eastern Marches in their belts.' Barns, Scottish War of Independence, 1874, vol. i. p. 175.

The terms of this service have been explained variously, but the true meaning seems to be that the owner of the fee should act as insurety and outsurety for the peaceful and honest intention of persons passing to and fro between the two countries, who would not be allowed to travel therein without permission from the holder of Beanley to do so. There might have been further duties belonging to it, making an office somewhat similar, but with inferior powers, to that attached in later times to the wardenship of the marches. The owner of the fee of Beanley was a person eminently fitted for the requirements of the position he occupied, as in addition to his Northumberland lordship he held, across the border, the earldom of Lothian or, as it came to be called, of Dunbar, with large landed possessions in connection with it.

The identity of Edmnd, the uncle of Gospatric, the former holder of some part of the land contained in King Henry's grant, cannot be ascertained; he was probably the brother of Gospatric's mother, whoever she may have been. Nor is anything known of Hamo, to whom the same king had given the land, afterwards held by Winnoc the hunter. In addition to Beanley, Winnoc was the owner of another large estate, the land of Archimorell, which comprised Bewick and Eglingham.

The first notice of these places occurs in the grant of them to the monastery of Saint Albans, through the daughter house of Saint Oswin of Tynemouth, by Winnoc, which was confirmed by Queen Matilda and her husband Henry I.¹ By another charter Henry granted to St. Albans and the abbot Richard (de Albin, who died in 1119) the manor of Egolewincham, fully and wholly, as well the moiety which Winuth (Winnoc) gave at the last as that he gave at first.² By a writ, which must have been issued before 1109, to Gerald (Gerard, 1101-1109), archbishop of York, Robert de Lascy, sheriff, Roger Picot and all his barons and faithful, French and English, of Yorkshire and Northumberland, King Henry notifies that he has given to God and Saint Alban and Richard, abbot of the same place, the land of Archimorell. And he wills that the saint shall hold it as quietly and honourably as he, the aforesaid Archimorell, held that land of the aforesaid saint. Roger Picot is ordered to give the abbot seisin.¹ The land of Archimorell was granted for their lives by Abbot Richard in fee farm, at a rent of 10s. yearly, to Gospatric and his son Waldef (Adam). The lease was continued by Abbot Geoffrey, the successor of Richard, to Gospatric, son of the earl (consul) Gospatric, and Adam, in an agreement made between them. The document, which is of more than ordinary interest, still exists in a very finely written deed, with a perfect seal of the abbey of St. Albans attached.

The abbot, with the consent of the chapter, grants to Gospatric and his son Adam, who was before called Waldief, the land of Archill Morel, to wit, Beuniche, with all the lands to it pertaining, and the land of Egulingham, which Winnoc the hunter gave to St. Alban and to St. Oswin, to be held in fee farm with theineslage, in saca and soca, and tol and tem, and infangelthef, in wood and in field (in plano), and in water, as favourably (melius) as the abbot Gaufrid holds it from the king. Gospatric is to pay yearly to the monks of Tinemutha £4, half at the Purification of St. Mary, and half at the Feast of St. Cuthbert in September; each payment was to be brought by him to Tinemutha. He has also to render to the abbot or his accredited messenger (aut nuncio ejus nominatim) 20s., or, if money fails, seven oxen, each of the value of 3s., and this is to be at the option of Gospatric (et hoc in voluntate Gospatrici sit); and if any one of the oxen shall be wanting, then 3s. is to be paid in lieu of it. In case Gospatric shall outlive his son, or his son him, the survivor shall relieve the land by giving sixty horae,² and he is to hold it by the same agreement and honour as his predecessor had held it; and when the survivor shall die, the whole land shall remain in the demesne of the saint and his monks without hindrance or challenge of any heir whatsoever; to be given up as well stocked and plenished in all things as it was the day the survivor was taken ill. Gospatric, on his part, grants that after his death the vill of Stanton shall be held by God and the martyrs for the redemption of his soul. In case he is properly (convenienter) summoned by the monks to attend their pleas in Northumberland, he is bound to appear. Gospatric also offers, as a perpetual alms to God and the holy martyrs, the church of Edoluingeham with the land of one carucate whole and quit, returning (ex qua terra exeunt) five horae, and of the value of £4 (quae sunt de iiii libris). In case Gospatric shall be unable or unwilling to be bound by the agreement concerning the lands, he shall return them whole and quit of all plaint and challenge of any heir of his whatsoever, but he shall have his surplus. Gospatric and his son were to maintain the agreement upon the body of Christ and the feretory of St. Alban in the presence of the abbot and brethren of the house. It was witnessed by Zacheus and Walter, priests, William de Gorram, Walter dapifer, Lambert, Symon, Rodbert, son of Anskit', William, son of Turst', Radulf, son of Gerold, Lucas, Turchill, William, Adam, son of Gospatric, Mainard' Judas, Wido, marshall of the king, Hunespac, Radulf, Toli de Westm', Aluvin de Uuathamestede, William de Ostreham, Turg'ar, Radulf Judas, Leofuwin.¹ An agreement quite similar, except in the clauses about relief, the gift of Stanton and the surplus, which are absent, and the witnesses, which differ, was made between St. Albans and Edgar, son of Gospatric.² This land came into the king's hands by the flight of Edgar into Scotland, when he joined in the rebellion against Henry II., and was restored in 1174 to St. Albans by the king.³

The two vills of Bewick and Eglingham, leased by St. Albans to Gospatric, and afterwards to Edgar, the land, as it is called, of Archil Morell, appear from the name to have been at one time in the possession of Morell of Bamburgh, the sheriff of Northumberland. There is no evidence to prove this ownership, but in the great scarcity of documents connected with property at the time in question, this is not to be wondered at. As he was the only person of the name holding a high position in the county, and was also the nephew of Robert de Mowbray, earl of Northumberland,¹ there can scarcely be any doubt that Morell, the sheriff, was the owner of Bewick and Eglingham during the reign of William Rufus.

His name first occurs as a witness, together with that of Robert de Mowbray, to two charters of William of St. Calais, bishop of Durham.² When Malcolm, king of Scots, invaded England and was surprised by Earl Robert at Alnwick,³ Morell appears to have taken a prominent and a not altogether generous part in the affair. This took place on St. Brice's day (November 13th), 1093, on the banks of the Aln, at a place which possibly got its name of Murealden from the principal actor in the fight.⁴ Malcolm was killed⁵ by Morell, who is described by the chronicler as of Baebbaburh, the earl's steward (sheriff), and the gossip of King Malcolm.⁶ Two years afterwards Morell took an active part in a transaction which ultimately brought to a head the rebellion of Robert de Mowbray against William Rufus, which for some time had been smouldering. Four Norwegian vessels, arriving at a Northumbrian port, were seized and plundered by Earl Robert and Morell, who took from the merchants all their goods.⁷ On their appealing to the king, Robert was ordered to make restitution. He disregarded the command, and was summoned to attend at the king's court, when, disobeying the order, he broke out into open rebellion. In the end he was taken prisoner at Tynemouth, the castle of Bamburgh being held against King William by Matilda, the earl's wife, and Morell. When William, advancing against the castle, summoned it to surrender, threatening, in case of refusal, to put out the eyes of Robert, it was delivered into his hands.⁸

Morell, having made his peace, came into attendance at the court of the king, and became the instrument through whom many of those who had joined the rebellion were brought to justice.¹ He was ultimately allowed to leave England, and in the end died abroad, having passed an unsettled life of poverty and disgrace.²

Of the events of Gospatric's life but little has been recorded. Although a great landowner under the Scottish king, and holding a high position in that kingdom, as is shown by the prominent place his name occupies among the witnesses to royal grants, he was, however, high in the favour of Henry I., who gave him, as has been already stated, the fee of Beanley. He, nevertheless, took a leading part in the invasion of England by King David, in 1138, and was in command of a division at the battle of the Standard, fought on Cowton Moor, near Northallerton, on August 23rd, when the Scottish army met with so disastrous a defeat, and where he fell by the shot of an arrow. He is not, it is true, mentioned by name, but there can be no doubt that he was the summus dux Lodonensium, who was at the head of the men of Lothian and others at the battle.³ After that event so disastrous to King David, Earl Gospatric's son, among the sons of other great Scottish lords, became a hostage to King Stephen on the part of David and his son Henry.⁴ It is probable that the son of Earl Gospatric may have been Waldeue, the son of his successor, the third earl of the name.

He does not appear to have been a great benefactor to the church, either in England or Scotland. The only grant he made to an English monastery (for that of Ederham and Nesebite to St. Cuthbert was not to the parent house of Durham, but to its dependant, Coldingham)⁵ was of the church of Edlingham to St. Albans, and the daughter priory of St. Oswin at Tynemouth.⁶ In Scotland he gave to the church of St. Nicholas of Home a carucate of land and the parish, to wit, the vill and half of Gordunc, his wife and his sons Gospatric, Edward and Edgar joining in the gift.¹ The church of Home itself, with all that of right belonged to it as freely, quietly and fully as Horn (Orm) the priest possessed it, was given to the monastery of Kelso by his son and successor, Gospatric III.²

Gospatric, the brother of Dolfin, earl of Lothian,³ was dead before August 16th, 1139, when King David confirmed the earl's grant of Ederham and Nesbit to Coldingham. David gives them with their right boundaries, as Gospatric held them the day he was living and was dead.⁴ By another charter dated May 3rd, 1147, David further confirmed Gospatric's grant, adding a clause that the monks are to be free from all custom except an annual payment of 30s. to Gospatric, the son of their benefactor, and his heirs, at Martinmas for the king's corrody, and except attendance with the king's army from which Gospatric is to be free.⁵ The grant of Gospatric, thus confirmed by David, was made for the souls of King Malcolm and his sons, Edgar and Alexander, and for King David and his son Henry, and himself and his wife and children. It contains some interesting features in the names of the witnesses and in the seal, the only one of the earl known to exist. There are two clauses condemnatory of those who might interfere with the grant: 'Whosoever shall take away this may God take away from him this life and the kingdom of heaven,' and 'If anyone shall wish to contradict this my alms, between him and God be it.' The witnesses are William, son of Duncan,⁶ and Gospatric his son, Vlkil, son of Meld' (Meldred), Rand' de Lind' (Randulph de Lindsay),⁷ S. the priest, John the chaplain, Gospatric, son of Crin'

The absence of the title Comes in connection with his name on documents which belong to a time after the death of his father is difficult to account for. The supposition that the earldom was ever held by Dolfin has nothing to support it, and appears to be a quite untenable one. Gospatric is not styled comes in the foundation charter given to the monks from Tiron in Le Perche by Earl David, when he established them at Selkirk in 1113, nor does his name appear among the first four of the magnates who witnessed the charter. Liber de Calhoun, vol. i, p. 4. He occurs without the title in the foundation charter of Scone granted in 1115 by Alexander I. Liber Ecclesie de Scon, Bannatyne Club, p. 1, and also in the inquisition, made by David, lord of Cumbria, in 1120, of the possessions of the church of Glasgow. *Reg. The legend, which is imperfect and much defaced, reads: LVM TRI TRISDO Sigillum Gospatrici fratris Dolfini.² His wife's name was Sibilla,³ about whom nothing more is known, and he had four sons, whose names have been recorded, and one daughter. From two of his sons local families were descended, who took their names from the places they possessed in Northumberland, Edlingham and Kestern (Castron), and with which they were connected, the one for five, the other for four generations. The names of his sons were Gospatric, who succeeded him in the serjeanty of Beanley, the Scottish fees and the earldom; Adam, once called Waldief, who does not appear to have left issue; Edward and Edgar. The order of their birth is uncertain, but Gospatric was without doubt the eldest. His daughter, Juliana, was given in marriage by Henry I. to Ranulf de Merley, lord of Morpeth,⁴ and received as dower from her father the villis of Horsley, Stanton, Witton, Ritton, Wyndgates, and one beyond the moors (Leuerchilde).⁵ Her father's gift was confirmed by her brother Edgar, in a charter differing in some respects from that of Gospatric.⁶ The villis were to be held with all the ordinary rights in lands, waters, forests pertaining to the lands, woods, mills, mill-ponds, meadows, pastures, roads, and outside the roads (et extra vias), and in all things belonging to the lands except the three services, common array, the county cornage and common work at the castle (Bamburgh) in the county.¹ These villis were never included in the Merlays' barony of Morpeth, but remained in the serjeanty of Beanley, and were found to be holden of that fee in capite of the king by Patric, earl of Dunbar, in 1247.²

Adam, otherwise Waldeue or Waldief, as has already been mentioned, was joined with his father Gospatric in the lease of Bewick and Eglingham granted by Richard, abbot of St. Albans. Some time between 1151 and 1166, Adam, called de Dunbar, admitted, in the presence of German, prior of Durham, and John, the archdeacon, that the church of Eglingham belonged to Robert, the abbot of St. Albans and the monastery of St. Oswin, and undertook to pay yearly one marc of silver in the name of the same church to the abbot and monks of St. Oswin.³ He appears to have had some connection with Eglingham, but there is nothing to show he was the parson. In the agreement between the monasteries of Durham and St. Albans, by which the church of Edlingham was made over to Durham, the tenement of Adam de Dunbar, and after him of Englerius, the clerk, was reserved.⁴ Beyond his being a witness to a charter of his brother Gospatric, nothing more is known of him.⁵

Edward, another of Gospatric's sons, from whom the family of Edlingham descended, was also a landowner in Scotland. From him the monastery of Melrose held some land at farm, as appears from a confirming charter by Malcolm IV. of Hertesheued (Hartside) and Spot, given to the abbey by Edward's brother Gospatric III.⁶ Some time before 1176 a dispute had arisen about heirship between Edward and his son Waldeue and Edgar, Edward's brother, of which Edgar had deforced them. Edgar's claim, whatever it may have been, was apparently disallowed, for in 1176 Edward and his son owed 80 marcs for having the right of inheritance (pro habendo recto de hereditate sua). The same entry occurs in the sheriff's account of the following year, with an additional clause, sed non habuit rectum. Part of the debt was paid in 1178, and the remainder in 1179, when Edward and his son were discharged.⁷

The order of Edgar's birth¹ and his legitimacy are uncertain. The important position he occupied (which, however, might have been a purely personal one) and the claim he set up about the inheritance, point to his being the next son after Gospatric, who succeeded to the earldom. The imputation of illegitimacy depends entirely on the statement of Richard, prior of Hexham, who, to judge from the intemperance of his language, was not an impartial witness. At the time (1138), when David, king of Scots, made the invasion of England which had its disastrous issue at the battle of the Standard, certain malignants, says Richard, whose only thought and pleasure was to hatch and carry out wickedness, had raided and plundered some villages belonging to the priory of Hexham. One of the leaders of this execrable band, was Edgar the bastard (nothus) son of Earl Gospatric.² In consequence of these hostile proceedings against the church of Hexham, Prior Richard would naturally have no good feeling towards Edgar, and his testimony can hardly perhaps be accepted as trustworthy. Whatever may have been the truth in the matter, Edgar was possessed of a large share of the English estates of his house, and acted in various transactions connected with the family and its property as if he were a lawfully born son. He is sometimes described as Edgar Unnithing,³ but usually as the son of Earl Gospatric.

From him the family afterwards called of Kestern descended, taking its name from the place, now called Caistron, on the river Coquet, not far above Rothbury.⁴ It is not probable that Edgar held any land in Coquetdale before his marriage, his father's fee not extending into that district. By his marriage with Aliz, the daughter of Yvo and his wife Agnes, he obtained ten manors, among which, with others in Yorkshire,

⁴ The place takes its name from the prehistoric camp there, of which considerable remains of the mounds and ditches are still left. In a grant by John de Kestern to Newminster abbey a piece of arable land is called Chestres. Newminster Cart. p. 123.

Westmoreland and Cumberland, were Terwit (Trewit), Cars (Castron), Thosse (Great Tosson), the other Tosse (Little Tosson), and Flotweyton (Flotterton) in Northumberland. This gift was confirmed by Walter, son of Yvo, his wife's brother, in a charter which contains a clause stating that Edgar binds himself and his heirs out of love (pro amore) to perform the royal service of utware as much as pertains to the lands.¹ The manor descended to his son Patric, and then in succession, from father to son, to three owners, each called John de Kestern, the last of whom, about the middle of the thirteenth century, parted with all his lands, the monastery of Newminster becoming the possessor of a large portion.

It was probably in connection with Castron that in 1169/70 Edgar Unnithing rendered an account to the sheriff of 40s. for his mares captured in the king's forest.²

It has already been mentioned that Edgar had a grant in fee farm of Bewick and Eglingham from the monastery of St. Albans. This lease must have been made before February 25th, 1146, on which day Geoffrey de Gorham, the abbot when the grant was made, died. It remained in his possession until 1174, when it was seized into the king's hands. In that year the sheriff rendered account of 46s. 8d., the issue of the land of Edgar Unnithing, who had gone into Scotland to the king's enemies.³ Edgar had taken part with King Henry's son Henry, when, aided by Malcolm, king of Scots, he had unsuccessfully rebelled against his father.

Henry II. restored these lands to the monasteries of St. Albans and St. Oswin of Tynemouth, in accordance with the finding of a jury of the neighbourhood, which, by the king's precept, had made enquiry and found that the vill was the escheat and demesne of St. Albans.⁴ Although Bewick, Eglingham and Lilburn had thus been restored to St. Albans, the earls of Dunbar still claimed to have right in them. In 1201, in the course of a suit against the abbot of St. Albans and the prior of Tynemouth, it was shown that Earl Patric owed the sheriff forty marcs and

He further ordered that no one was to be allowed to do them any injury or damage, as they held the lands by the gift of Queen Matilda, his grandmother, as by her charter was witnessed. Lansdowne MSS. four palfreys for having a recognition by twelve free and legal men of the vicinity of Bewick and Eglington, before the king or his justices, if Edgar, uncle of Waldeue, father of Earl Patric, was seised in his demesne as of fee of the vill of Bewick and Eglington, and of Lilleburn, with appurtenances, the year and day (1173) when war was begun between Henry the king, the father, and Henry the king, the younger, his son, and if by reason of that war he had been disseised. Earl Patric also owed ten marcs for having a jury of twelve men of Bewic and Eglington, Midelton and Rodden (to enquire) if Edgar was seised of the service of Liulf, son of Liulf,¹ before the first coronation (1154) of Henry, father of the present king (John), of the three Middeltons and of Roddan, to wit, of 30s. yearly, of four waitinges, and if he, Earl Patric, is the nearest heir of Earl Waldeue.² In 1204/5, Earl Patric owed ten marcs and two

² Pipe Roll, 3 John rot. 17. In the year 1210 another enquiry was made about the service of Liulf, son of Liulf. 'Jurata si Edgarus auunculus Comitis Waldeui, patris Comitis Patricii, fuit seisitus in servitio Liulfii filii Liulfii, post primam coronationem (1154) Henrici regis patris de ij Middelton et de Roddam, scilicet, xxx solid' et iiii weinting' remanet. Quia Thomas filius Liulfii qui servitium illud debet bene cognoscit quod ita fuit seisitus de servicio illo et ipsemet facit illud servicium Domino Regi per preceptum Domini Regis.' (11 John) Curia Regis Roll, No. 21, m. 12 dorso.

The word 'waytinga,' which occurs in other similar forms of spelling, represents a service not infrequent in Scotland, but apparently, except in this instance, unknown in England, where it was probably, through the connection of the place with the house of Dunbar, introduced from beyond the Tweed. It is possible, however, that the term wait-fe, a payment made by the abbot of St. Edmunds, 'vigilibus de Castello Norwici,' may have reference to the same service. Camden Society, Chronica Joacelini de Brakelonda, p. 50. Cowell, in his Law Dictionary, explains wayt-fee, ward-penny, as a fee paid for keeping watch and ward, and quotes from Blount on Tenures, p. 7. 'Thomas Spelman, tenuit manerium de Barborough (Norfolk), per servitium militare et per redditum, 14s. pro wayt-fee et castleward.' The service has been explained by Dr. Stuart (Exchequer Rolls of Scotland, vol. i. p. xlviii.) as a payment made by holders in thanage in lieu of entertaining the king on his journeys, and this explanation has been generally accepted. It has been doubted by some whether this was the nature of the service represented by the term, and there is much to be alleged in support of the doubt. The subject is one of much difficulty in its elucidation, nor is it required here to discuss the matter. A few notes in connection with the service may, however, be cited. The payment was usually made in cows, which were at times sold by the sheriff, and the money thus accruing accounted for in his return. 'Ex computo E. de Montealto, vicecomitis de Forfar, anno mclxiv. De waytingis de Forfar et de Glammes. Redditus vaccarum de illo anno, scilicet de Forfar xxiv vaccae et de Glammes de illo anno xiii vaccae et dimid.' Idem, p. 6. 'Ex computo I. de Kynros vicecomitis de Kynros, etc. De waitinga quatuor noctium p.a. etc. Redditus vaccarum de illo anno xl vaccae etc. Inde venduntur xl vaccae pro £10.' Idem, p. 16. 'Comptus Davidis de Betun militis, vicecom. de Forfar m.c.c.xc. Redditus vaccarum de duobus annis, scilicet de waytingis duarum noctium p.a. De Forfar xlviij vaccae.' Idem, p. 49. 'Item pro waytinga (unius) et dimid. noctis, de thanagio de Glaumes de dictis (duobus annis) xxvii vaccae.' Idem, p. 50. The service was not attached only to land held in thanage, for William, king of Scots, granted to Robert de Aubein' 20 marcs due to him yearly, for a waiting, from the prior and convent of Coldingham, out of their lands there, which they would hold in free alms. Raine, North Durham, appendix, p. 12, No. lviii. Other documents in connection with the grant will be found idem, pp. 13, 15, Nos. lxi. lxxiii. lxxix. lxx. Nor was the payment, as in the case first noticed, always made direct to the king, who sometimes transferred it. The abbey of Cupar was discharged by the king of an annual waiting from the lands of Adbreth, due to the king's falconers, to whom it had been granted. Register of the Abbey of Cupar, ed. Rogers, vol. i. p. 329. The service appears to have had much in common with that of the Celtic conveth, the provision made for supplying the head of the tribe with food for the night when he was journeying through the land occupied by the members who held that part of the tribal territory. The service of corngium, noutgeld, may, perhaps, be suggested by way of illustration.

hounds and six greyhounds for having an inquisition of legal knights of the county, who knew best and were willing to speak the truth, to say what service Liulph, father of Thomas, made to Edgar, son of Earl Gospatric, of the manors of the three Middeltons and of Rodun, with the appurtenances, on the day when Edgar was disseised by reason of the war between King Henry and the king of Scotland (1174), so that it does not result by that occasion that Thomas, son of Liulf, holds the aforesaid lands of the king, since the king wishes that the aforesaid earl should do him the service for them which his predecessors did to his (the king's) predecessors, and that the aforesaid Thomas should do his service and homage enquired into to the aforesaid earl for the aforesaid manors.¹ The dispute concerning these manors was still going on in 1210, when Earl Patric appeared by his proctors against the abbot of St. Albans and the prior of Tynemouth in a plea of trespass in Bewic and Eglingham and Parva Lilleburn, and against Thomas, son of Liulf, in a plea of service for the three Middeltons and Rodun.² An entry on the Curia Regis Roll of Easter term, 1210, throws some light on the prosecution of the suit. A jury was summoned to enquire (ad recognoscendum) if Edgar was seised of the manors on the year and day when the war began, and if by occasion of that war he was disseised. The abbot of St. Albans and the prior of Tynemouth, who then held the lands, protested against the appointment of a jury, as it was against the assize of the kingdom; Patric answered that he did not wish to plead therein, but asked that the king's precept might be made to him. The abbot and prior say, by the abbot's attorney, that Edgar has a son still living, and that during his lifetime no one else can claim right in the lands. A day, the morrow after Holy Trinity, is given them to hear judgment at Westminster.³

his descendants for several generations, and they had also some interest in Edlingham, the church of which was confirmed to the monks of Durham by his son Patric.¹ It is, however, probable that he never regained any right in Bewick and Eglingham. He had sufficient title in Edlingham, whatever its nature may have been, to make it desirable for St. Albans to obtain from him a confirmation of his father's grant of the church there to that monastery.² This confirmation was made before his rebellion and disseisure, the church of Edlingham having been transferred to Durham in 1174. The grant of the advowson may not have been a gift, but a payment for the lease of Bewick and Eglingham, made to Gospatric and Edgar by the monks of St. Albans.

By his wife Aliz, daughter of Yvo, Edgar had two sons; Alexander, called at one time his son and heir,³ who apparently died without issue, probably in his father's lifetime, and Patric, who succeeded him at Castron.

To his charter of confirmation of the church of Edlingham, a very fine impression of his seal is still attached. It is round, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter. A winged monster with a lion's head turned backwards, griffin's paws, and a tail consisting of a conventional branch which turns upwards. HOC EST SIGILLVM EDGARI FILII GOPATRICH COMITIS.⁴

Gospatric, the brother of Dolfin, was succeeded by his eldest son, Gospatric, the third of the name, in the earldom of Lothian, and the great fee there and in the adjoining district of Scotland. The serjeanty of Beanley also descended to him, though probably much, if not all of it, had been then subinfeudated, as it certainly was in the time of Earl Patric, his grandson. Though Gospatric did not equal in the extent of his Northumberland fee some of the larger landowners, he was possessed of an extensive lordship, and in 1160-1 he rendered account of twelve mares for six knight's fees.⁵ In 1174-5 the sheriff of Northumberland rendered account of £75 os. 10d. for Earl Patric.⁶ The manor of Edlingham, in spite of the claim of Edgar, appears to have passed to his brother

Edward, in whose son, Waldeue, and his descendants, it remained for more than two centuries. Gospatric was more connected with Scotland than with England, where he had no title of honour, and where his interests were those only of the owner of the fee of Beanley. Nor is much recorded of him in Scotland, except that he made some grants and confirmations to local religious houses. He confirmed to St. Cuthbert and the monks of Durham and the daughter priory of Coldingham, the gift of his father of the vill and church of Ederham, with its chapels, and the vill of Nesebite, by two charters, to each of which his seal is attached. To one of them, in addition to his brother Adam, another Adam, son of Gospatric, and Ketell, son of Dolfin, both probably relatives, are witnesses.¹ The seal, which has a secretum, is round, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches diameter. It is equestrian. Gospatric wears a conical helmet, and carries a kite-shaped shield, and a sword held over the shoulder in his right hand. ✠ SIG . L . . He founded a Cistercian convent for nuns at Coldstream, in which his wife Derdere joined, giving them land at Hersill, of which she may have been the heir as well as the owner. The convent was further endowed by succeeding members of the family, earls of Dunbar, and of collateral branches.³ He gave to the monastery of Melrose Hertesheued and Spot, a gift which was confirmed by King Malcolm, and Gospatric's son Waldeue,⁴ and to the abbey of St. Mary of Kelso the churches of Home and Foghou.⁵ He is said to have founded a nunnery at Eccles, where he and his wife were buried. There is no direct evidence in proof of this, the statement being made only by writers long after his time, but who may have been recording a true tradition current when they wrote.

A story told by Reginald of Durham gives a favourable impression of Gospatric. In a town in Lothian called Dunbar, he says, there dwelt a man great in faith but poor in worldly goods, who was afflicted with an incurable and most painful disease, which is very graphically described by Reginald. Through all his distressful life he remained cheerful and patient, constantly occupied in good works, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, orphans and strangers, opening his house to the wanderer, and though worn down with want and pain, which were to him but as the breath of a passing smoke, giving to them freely, out of the riches of his poverty, the consolation of kindness and help. A tenant of Earl Gospatric, he was forgiven his rent through the respect and goodwill of his lord, and was allowed to live on his land rent free during his life.¹

Gospatric died in 1166, and was succeeded by his son Waldene.² Roger of Hoveden says his death occurred in Scotland.³

There is much difficulty in respect of the place of death of the three Gospatrics. The first, once earl of Northumberland, has been commonly regarded as he who became a monk at Durham, and who died and was buried there in the cemetery of the monastery. What is supposed to be the covering stone of his grave, discovered in 1821, is still preserved at Durham. Its general appearance and the lettering of the inscription suggest a date rather of the latter part of the twelfth than of the end of the eleventh century. There can scarcely, however, be any doubt that the first Gospatric died and was buried at Norham, as has already been stated. The second, the brother of Dolfin, was killed at the battle of the Standard, and there only remains his son, the third earl of the name, to whom it appears possible to attribute the entry in the Liber Vitae of Durham, 'Gospatricus Comes et Monachus,' and the inscription on the grave cover, 'Gospatricus Comes.' It is possible that, although a monk at Durham, he may have gone to Scotland for some purpose and, as Roger de Hoveden says, have died there, and his body have been brought from thence to be buried in the cemetery of the monastery in which he had become a monk.

The name of his wife was Derdere, but of her parentage nothing is known. She appears to have possessed land near Coldstream, either by heritage or by dower. He had two sons, Waldene, who succeeded him in the earldom, and Patric, from whom descended the family which ultimately acquired the earldom of Home.

His successor, Waldeue, bore a name which occurs under the various forms of Waltheof, Waldief and Walleue. It was a common one among those connected, directly or collaterally, with Earl Waldene, the son of the great and noble Dane, Siward, the hero of many true as also of many legendary tales, and whose blood ran in the veins of Earl Waldeue, the son of Gospatric. He succeeded to a great inheritance, the larger part outside the realm of England, but having also, as the lord of the serjeanty of Beanley, a position of authority in Northumberland. His name rarely occurs in connection with the political events of the two kingdoms or with local affairs. When William, king of Scots, irritated by his failure to obtain from Henry II. a recognition of his claim to the earldom of Northumberland as his right by inheritance from his grandfather, King David, to whom he asserted it had been given, as was shown by charters,¹ purposed to make war against England, Earl Waldeue endeavoured, but without success, to restrain him from carrying out his ill-advised and, in the end, disastrous project.² The younger Henry, who had been crowned as the third king of the name at Westminster in 1170, and again at Winchester in 1172, was then in rebellion against his father, and had promised William to grant him all Northumberland up to the Tyne, and to his brother David, the earldom of Huntingdon, of which he was already in possession, with the addition of all Cambridgeshire.³ The capture of William at Alwick, July 13th, 1174, caused the collapse of the Scottish invasion, in which Waldeue and the men of Lothian do not appear to have taken a part. In the following year Waldeue was one of the hostages for the king of Scots under the terms of the treaty of Falaise, made between him and the English king.⁴ In conjunction with Earl Duncan of Fife and the earl of Angus, Waldeue made oath that if William did not observe the agreement constituted by the treaty, they would be bound to the king of England to take part against him, until he made satisfaction according to the will of King

Henry.¹ He appears to have remained in favour with Henry, for in 1177 the sheriff of Northumberland rendered account of twenty mares for aid, of the theinage of Earl Waldeue, which by the king's brief was pardoned. In the same year, Halden, his steward, owed forty mares for an unjust disseisin, which was also pardoned by the king two years afterwards.²

He does not appear to have given land directly to any religious house, though he gave confirmations of his ancestors' grants.³ To the abbey of Kelso he gave some niefs,⁴ and to Melrose common of pasture in Lambermore, by a charter witnessed by his wife Aelma and his uncle Edward.⁵ He died in 1182.⁶ Nothing is known about his wife Aline, except the time of her death, August 20th, 1179.⁷ He had two sons, Patric, his successor in the earldom, and Constantine.⁸

His seal, like that of his father and grandfather, is somewhat rudely executed. It is round, $2\frac{3}{4}$ inches in diameter; equestrian. Waldene wears a conical helmet and carries a shield, and a sword pointing upwards over the shoulder in his right hand. SIGILLVM WALGŒVI COMITIS.⁹

Patric, who became earl on the death of his father in 1182, was the first of the owners of the great Scottish fee who seems to have been styled earl of Dunbar.¹⁰ Before him they were apparently called earls of Lothian, as his grandfather Gospatric is designated on his seal; his father is merely Waldeue the earl, but Patric bears on his seal the title earl of Dunbar. He succeeded to the estates and honours of his house in Scotland, and to the lordship of Beanley, and other lands in Northumberland, though, as will be seen, his title to some of them was disputed. The first notice of him occurring in a public document is in 1186-7, when Robert de Forde accounted to the sheriff in forty mares for having the land of Derecestre, of which Earl Patric had deforced him.¹ It was probably the same land for the restitution of which William de Forde, in 1200-1, gave the king one hundred mares for having his precept to Earl Patric to restore him the lands in which his father had been seised when he died.²

It happened in 1199 that the bridge at Berwick, built apparently in the time of Hugh Pudsey, bishop of Durham, had been carried away (ponte autem . . . asportato), probably by a flood. In obedience to the command of William, king of Scots, Earl Patric, governor (custos) of Berwick and chief justiciar of the whole realm of Scotland, planned its rebuilding. The work was prohibited by Philip of Poitou, bishop of Durham, who would not allow it to abut upon his land. This, as in the case of the former bridge, it was of necessity obliged to do, the south bank of the Tweed being within Islandshire, part of the palatinate of Durham. Through the good offices of William de Stuteville the bishop withdrew his objection on the condition that the agreement made between the king of Scotland and his predecessor, Bishop Hugh, should be adhered to.³

Earl Patric went to Lincoln, in 1200, with William, king of Scots, when he became the man of King John, and swore fidelity to him upon the cross of Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, in the presence of a number of English and Scottish bishops and barons, of whom Earl Patric, who is called Comes de Loonais, was one.⁴ In 1211 Beanley was in the king's hand, when the sheriff rendered account of £8 and half a marc for the fee farm for the whole year of the land of Benleia, which had been Earl Patric's. In the same year Thomas, son of Thomas de Hildreton (Hlderton), rendered account of one hundred mares for having his land, Middelton and Roddum (part of Earl Patric's fee), which were in the king's hand. Still, in the same year, Earl Patric rendered account of one hundred mares and one best palfrey for having seisin of his lands and fee, of which he had been disseised by the king's precept. He had paid £50 into the Treasury, and this, in addition to £8 and half a marc, the issue of his land, which the sheriff had accounted for, left a balance of £8 and half a marc, for which Saher de Quincy, earl of Winchester, was responsible. It was discharged by the earl of Winchester in 1214, Earl Patric in the meanwhile having paid ten marcs in lieu of the pallrey.¹ By an agreement made November 11th, 1218, between him and his wife Cristiana and Sir Robert de Brus, Earl Patric and his wife devised to Sir Robert all their land in Hertness, a part of the great Bruce fee in Durham. It belonged to the dower of the countess, who was Patric's second wife and the widow of William de Brus. It was leased to her son, Sir Robert, for a term of eight years, on payment by him of £36 of silver, and a yearly rent of 6s. Sir Robert is stated to have received it from his grandfather.² Some land which Earl Patric held in Molfat may have been part of the same dower. It adjoined land belonging to Sir Robert de Brus, lord of Annandale.³ Earl Patric accompanied Alexander II. on his journey to York when he went there to be married to Johanna, daughter of King John and sister of Henry III. He was present at the marriage on June 19th, 1221, and was a witness to the grant of dower by the Scottish king.⁴ In the year following Earl Patric acted as one of the principal persons in connection with the settlement of the boundaries of a piece of land on the march between the two countries. There had been a dispute about this land going on for some time between the prior of Kirkham, acting in the interest of the canons of Carham, and Bernard de Hawden, a local landowner. On May 10th, 1222, King Henry, on the complaint of Robert de Ros and the prior of Kirkham, who alleged that an encroachment had been made on England, issued his writ to the sheriff of Northumberland, with whom he associated the chancellor, Richard, bishop of Durham (or, he being absent, his bailiff), Hugh de Bolbec, Richard de Umframville, Roger de Merlay, and other prudent and loyal knights of Northumberland, such as the sheriff thought fit, to proceed to the marches between England and Scotland at Witelawe, and there to set out the boundaries as they were in the time of King John and his predecessors.⁵ The result of this writ is told in a letter from Hugh de Bolbec to Henry III. He writes to the king that on the quinzane of Michaelmas, 1222, a day appointed by King Alexander, he, in company with some discreet Northumberland knights, at a place called Revedene-burne (Reddenburn, Ridingburn), met David de Lindesey, justiciar of Lothian (Laoudiae), Patric, earl of Dunbar, and other knights appointed by the king of Scotland. In accordance with the purpose of the meeting, they chose six English and six Scottish knights as jurors, to make a true perambulation of the boundary of the kingdoms between Karham (Carham), and Hawedene (Hadden). The English knights took a line along the true and old marches between the kingdoms, with which the Scottish knights entirely disagreed, disputing its correctness. It was then arranged by the justiciar and Earl Patric and Hugh de Bolbec to appoint other twelve knights, six on each side, who were to be joined in the perambulation by the previous twelve. The result was the same as before: the English party agreed upon one set of boundaries, the Scottish upon another. Having come to a deadlock, Hugh de Bolbec, acting by the king's order, chose twenty-four prudent and loyal knights of his county (Northumberland), to decide what were the ancient marches between the kingdoms. They, having been sworn, declared the boundaries to be as follows. Commencing from the river Tweed and ascending by the rivulet of Revedenburne, towards the south as far as to the Three Carrs (Tres Karras), and from thence in a direct line ascending as far as to Hoperichelawe, and from thence in a direct line to Witelawe. When they proposed to follow this course and began to make the perambulation, the justiciar and Earl Patric with their knights violently obstructed them, and prevented them by threats from carrying out their purpose. The Northumberland knights did not oppose force to force, but were content to assert with firmness that the boundaries they had laid down were the correct and ancient marches. Hugh de Bolbec requests to be informed what is King Henry's will in the affair.¹ Nothing appears to have been settled upon this occasion as to the true boundary, nor does any other proceeding in reference to the matter seem to have taken place until the lapse of over twenty-three years. On October 13th, 1245, a declaration about the marches between Karram (Carham), and Hawndene (Hadden), was made on the oath of twenty-four knights of Northumberland. They found the boundary to be the same as that set out by the English jurors on the previous occasion. The names of the knights were Roger fitz

In 1225 there was a dispute between Earl Patric and the monastery of Tynemouth about the advowson of Egglewincham, the nature of which does not appear. In the quinzane of Trinity, the essoiners of the prior of Tynemouth appeared against him in the plea. Earl Patric did not appear, and a day was given him, through his essoiner, and the essoiners of the prior went thence without a day (et ideo essoinitores Prioris inde sine die). The earl and his sureties for the prosecution, John, son of Waldief, and his brother Henry, were amerced.³ In 1226-7 there had arisen some difficulty in regard to the payment of tallage from those who held in the Middeltons of the fee of Earl Patric. The sheriff returned that Thomas de Middelton owed one marc for tallage of the last assize; John de alia Middelton, 40s. for the same; John de Rodune, two mares;

Henry de Rodune, five mares; Simon the mercer, and John, son of Herbert, who held of the heirship of Constantine de Middelton, two mares. The sheriff was ordered by the king's brief, which was in the roll of the marshall, to take nothing from the fee of Earl Patric, by occasion of the said tallage, for the use of the king, until the king ordered otherwise. The sheriff was further directed to make known to the king if Earl Patric held his land in Northumberland by barony.¹

Towards the latter part of his life, when possibly he was not capable of taking an active part in his affairs, being then an aged man, his son, who succeeded him as Patric II., appears to have occupied a position greater than that of heir would have warranted. On March 30th, 1231, acting, as he says, on what he found in King Edgar's charter, and other evidences, brought under his notice by Thomas, prior of Coldingham, he rendered back, by a deed executed on that day, in the court of King Alexander at Roxburgh, to the monks of Durham located at Coldingham, the vill of Swinewode, with the demesne lands and all other its appurtenances, 'per fustum et baculum.'² In others of his charters he states that he made the lands over to them because the vill had been unjustly detained and occupied by his ancestors, and the monks thereby deprived of the profit of the land given to them by King Edgar.³ So far as appears on the face of these deeds, the transaction is one arising entirely out of pure and unselfish motives, and the character Earl Patric bore is one quite consistent with such a view. But there was also a matter of business in the affair, and Patric received from the monks a compensation in money for the transfer. Whether that was one adequate to the value of the lands it is impossible to ascertain, nor is it quite clear, from the account

III. with some differences. John de alia Middelton is John de Suth Midilton and he owes two mares; Henry de Rodune and John de Rodune each owed one marc; Simon the mercer is called of North Midelton and owed one marc; and John, son of Herbert, owed two marks. On April 9th, 1230, the sheriff was ordered not to distrain for tallage on the men who held of Earl Patric, except for what they were wont to pay in the time of Henry II., Richard and John. *Rot. And on April 27th, the sheriff was ordered to have a jury to inquire if the men of Earl Patric of Scotland, of the three vills of Middelton and of the vill of Rodune, had tallage levied on them in the time of the king's three predecessors, up to the war between himself and his barons of England, or not. of the payments, how much he actually received. The receipts, which run from December 28th, 1231, to June 24th, 1232, seem to show that he got 510 mares for himself, and 10 mares for his wife.¹ In one of the receipts he states that as he is unable to come in person to their eastern parts (in partes vestras orientales) on the feast of St. John Baptist (June 24th), to receive the money at that time due to him, he sends his special and faithful man, Sir Robert de Anesey, his comrade (consortem meum), Sir David de Burdune, his knight and faithful, and Robert de Lambedene, his notary, who carries and has his seal, to receive the same.² His gift was confirmed by Sir William, his brother.³ Patric I. gave confirmations of his ancestors' grants and made some himself to many of the monastic bodies in that part of Scotland with which he was connected. Following in the steps of his ancestors, he endowed the monks of St. Cuthbert at Coldingham, quit-claiming some land lying between Fogo and Swinton, and giving them a moiety of Billy.⁴ To the Praemonstratensian abbey of Dryburgh he gave the land called Elwinesley, on the Leader, two bovates of laud and a toft and croft in Ersildon, and common pasture in the same vill for one hundred sheep, twelve oxen, twelve swine and two horses. In his borough of Dunbar, he gave them a toft, a house and two and a half acres of land, once held by Hugh, his uncle, Sir Patric's chaplain.⁵ An agreement made by him with the abbey of Melrose in 1208, concerning a piece of cultivated land called Sorwelesfeld and pasture he had given the monks, contains some clauses of special interest in relation to agricultural and pastoral rights and operations.⁶

He had a long tenure of the earldom to which he succeeded in 1182, dying in 1232, after a reign of fifty years. A touching picture of his closing days has been left. He called together his sons and daughters, relatives and neighbours, that with him they might celebrate with joy the birthday of our Lord. Four days had gone by, when, seized by a grave sickness, he sent for his friend and relation, Adam de Harkanes, abbot of Melrose. From him he received the last rites, extreme unction, and the monastic habit, and giving to all his dying farewell, he closed his last day on the festival of St. Silvester (December 31st). He was buried in the church of St. Mary of Eccles, where his grandfather Gospatric is said to have founded a Cistercian nunnery. He was succeeded by his son Patric, who is described by the chronicler as a doughty soldier and nephew of the king.¹

He married first, in 1184, Ada, daughter of William, king of Scots,² and by her, who died in 1200, he had two sons and one daughter, and secondly, Cristiana, widow of William de Brus,³ by whom he is not known to have had any children. His sons were Patric, his successor in the earldom, and Sir William,⁴ who died in 1253,⁵ having married Christiana, daughter and heiress of Walter Corbet of Makerston, with whom he obtained that and other estates.⁶ A curious and interesting story is told about him by the chronicler of Melrose. In the year 1240, the bones of the abbots of Melrose were removed from the place of their burial at the entrance of the chapter house to a more fitting place at the east end of the same building, the bones of Abbot Wallene, whose body was found to have been burnt, being excepted. Those who were present at the opening of the graves carried away with them some of the small bones, leaving the rest in peace. Sir William, son of Earl Patric, and nephew of the king (Alexander II.), a knight of good repute, begged and was given a tooth of the abbot. He afterwards related that sick persons had received many benefits from the relic.⁷

Earl Patric's daughter Ada, who had the land of Home in free marriage from her father and is called Domina de Home,⁸ was married first to William de Curtenay,⁹ secondly to Theobald de Lascelles, and thirdly to her cousin, Sir William, lord of Greenlaw, grandson of Earl Gospatric III. Earl Patric had more than one daughter, and possibly more than two sons, for in a charter of his to the monks of Melrose he mentions his son Patric and all his sons and daughters,¹ and among those who spent Christmas with him immediately before his death were daughters.

Patric, the second of the name, became earl of Dunbar on the death of his father. Having done homage to Henry III. for the lands he held in England, the sheriff of Northumberland was ordered on February 22nd, 1233, to give him seisin of them.⁵ He does not appear to have had any land permanently in demesne, though, as in the case of Edlingham in 1247, portions of his fee seem to have been sometimes in his own hands. The text of two accounts of what he held, taken after inquisitions, and contained in Testa de Nevill, is given in the note,⁶ but the third is so valuable in its fulness of detail, and in what it records of changes of tenure and of the names of the sub-feudatories under Earl Patric, that it is given here in full, though in a translated form. The nature of the service by which the serjeanty of Beanley was held has been discussed before and need not be repeated.

On April 11th, 1247, not long before the death of Earl Patric, King Henry issued an order to Thomas de Staunford and Robert de Crepping that, in conjunction with the sheriff and a jury, they should make enquiry into a serjeanty in Northumberland which Earl Patric held of the king. It had been reported to the king that alienations of land had taken place, and they were to examine into this and state, if such had occurred, by what authority these alienations had been made, and who were the persons then in possession of these lands. The inquisition was made by Robert de Kersewell (Cresswell), Samson de Coupland, Nicholas de Aketona, Hugh de Burntona, Robert de Hertwaytona, Simon de Horseley, Robert de Fandun, John de Letewell, Peter de la bataile, Hugh de Herle, William le Walays and Walter de Prendwike. The inquiry was about the lands and tenements which Earl Patric held and which he ought to hold of the king in serjeanty, namely: Benley, Sciple, Hiddisley, Harope, Bromdun, Bremtona, Lemontona, Wutona, Edilincham, Wyttona, Wyndegates, Stantona, Horseley, Rittona, Leuerilcheld. They found that Earl Patric, father of the present Earl Patric, who held Benley in drengage, turned it into a service of a payment of twelve mares of silver yearly, and that John, son of Alexander, now holds it; that Quaspatricius (Gospatric), great-grandfather of Earl Patric that now is, gave Sciple to the ancestors of Rametta, wife of Enerard le Tyeis,¹ and that John de Eslintona and Richard Frebern now hold it; Quaspatricius gave to Edward,² Edilincham, Hyddisley, Lamontona, Wutona, Bromduna, Bremtona and Harope, Edward alienated Bromduna, and Ralph de Feritate and Henry de la Val now hold it ; the same (Edward) alienated Bremtona, and John de Bremtona now holds it ; Waldene, son of Edward, gave Harope to the brethren of St. Lazarus, who now hold it in alms ; John, son of Waldene, turned the drengage of Lemontona into free service, and Adam de Lemontona now holds it ; the same John turned the drengage tenure of Wuttona into free service, and John de Wuttona and many feoffees now hold it ; the same John died not long ago, and Earl Patric himself now holds Edilineham and Hyddisley, but in them there are many feoffees ; King Henry (I.), (the present king's) great-great-grandfather, and Earl Quaspatric gave in frank marriage with Juliana, daughter of Quaspatric, to Randulf de Merlaco (Merlay), Wyttona, Wyndegates, Horseley, Stanton, Rittona and Lenerilcheld, Roger de Merlaco holds Wyttona and Wyndegates, but there are in them many feoffees, Walter, son of William and Johanna, his wife, now hold Stanton and Lenerilcheld ; Hugh Gubium and William de Horseley now hold Horseley ; Randulf de Merlaco gave Rittona in free alms to the abbey of Newminster, and the abbot and monastery now hold it.¹

Not long after he succeeded to the earldom Patric took a prominent and successful part in an affair of some moment in Scotland. In the year 1235, after the death of Alan, lord of Galloway, the natives of that province not wishing it to be divided among the three co-heirs of Alan, and failing to induce King Alexander to accede to their request, went into rebellion. They chose Thomas, an illegitimate son of Alan, as their leader, who brought over a large body of Irish to assist him. The rebellion was ultimately suppressed, owing in a large measure to the able action of Earl Patric.² In 1236, at the time when Henry III. and the barons were at feud, Alexander II. of Scotland went to Newcastle to meet the English king in order to press his claim to the northern counties. Among those who were with him was Earl Patric, whose counsel no doubt was then as serviceable to the king as it was on other occasions.³

The dispute which led to litigation in his father's time about rights in Bewick and Eglington, between him and the monastery of St. Albans, had not apparently been then settled, for on July 19th, 1237, the abbot appointed his attornies to appear in a plaint made against him by Earl Patric, concerning the manor of Bewyc.⁴

In September, 1237, a treaty was concluded at York, in the presence of Cardinal Ottoboni, the papal legate, between King Henry and Alexander II., king of Scots, whereby Alexander resigned all claim to the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland and Westmorland, which the Scottish kings had persistently asserted to be their right through their descent from Earl Waltheof. The name of Earl Patric stands at the head of the great nobles who witnessed the treaty and swore to abide by it. King Henry engaged to give Alexander two hundred librates of land in Northumberland and Cumberland under certain stated conditions.¹

In a plea coram Rege in Northumberland in February, 1241, there is a case recorded referring to Earl Patric. Robert de Ros, the king's chief justice of the forest, was summoned by Thomas de Stratton on a charge that he had unjustly disseised him of his bailliary, and had besides committed many transgressions in the king's forest. Among the alleged offences of Robert were the following: that in company with Roger Bertram he had hunted in the forest and had uncoupled his hounds and killed stags, and though he and his men were attached they were not fined; that when he passed through the forest, from one of his manors to another, he had taken with him Adam de Plesseto and many other 'lewd fellows of the baser sort' who were old offenders against the forest laws, and that in spite of the foresters they had killed sometimes four, sometimes three, and sometimes more deer, to the detriment of the forest and to the king's hurt; that on one occasion Earl Patric took a hind and William de Ros a roe. Earl Patric appeared before the justices but was not fined, and William de Ros, saying he had good warranty, gave no pledge and made no engagement, and the plea was dismissed. Robert de Ros, who seems to have been a kindly man and a good neighbour, pleaded not guilty, but admitted when on his journeys through the forest, acting as a justice of the forest, he sometimes killed a deer or two, but never to the damage of the forest. As to the case of Earl Patric, who on his way to Scotland had asked for a deer, he gave it to him acting on the part of the king, the roe he gave as the king's justice and on the king's behalf. When a knight was ill, he said, or a lady was pregnant, and they longed for venison, he gave them on the part of the king a deer, as it was lawful for him to do. When the matter came before the king's court, Thomas de Stratton failed to prove his case, having no witnesses except his foresters, who, having been dismissed, were prejudiced. It was found that he had been justly disseised, as his claim was false, and he was amerced; Robert de Ros having acted on behalf of the king's honour.¹ Earl Patric came into connection with the king's deer on another occasion, but after a quite different fashion. Not long before he left England to join Lewis IX. of France in his crusade, on January 23rd, 1248, Robert Passelewe was ordered to give him in the forest of Wauberge two bucks and ten does.² It is not unlikely that this gift was made for the purpose of improving Earl Patric's herd in Scotland, by crossing the deer there with another breed from an English forest.

In the year 1242 Earl Patric became involved in a feud between two of the great baronial houses of Scotland, which appears to have been going on for some time before the event took place which resulted in the banishment of the members of one of them from the kingdom. In that year, at a tournament held in the south of Scotland, not far from the border, in the play of spears (in illo hastiludio), Walter Biset, one of the family the head of which was the lord of Aboyn, was unhorsed by Patric, earl of Atholl, son of Thomas of Galloway, a youth of good parts and promise. Biset took his revenge at once, and the night following the earl of Atholl and his companions were burnt to death at Haddington in the place—it is called a barn—where they were sleeping. According to another account they were slain before the place was set on fire. When this came to the knowledge of Earl Patric of Dunbar, he, with other magnates, took immediate steps against Walter Biset, designing, as the chronicler says, to cut him in pieces. He fled to the king, declaring his innocence, at the same time declining to be tried before the court and offering to submit himself to the ordeal of battle. In the end the whole family of Biset were banished from the kingdom, only escaping on the condition that they took on them the cross for the relief of the Holy Land, and the redemption of the soul of the murdered earl of Atholl. Even then they only escaped from the country with difficulty and by stealth.³ The Bisets, disregarding their engagement to become soldiers of the cross against the infidel, went over to King Henry of England, and fomented ill blood against Alexander of Scotland. In 1244, Henry assembled a large force at Newcastle for the purpose of invading Scotland. To check this movement Alexander, advancing through Northumberland, entrenched himself near Ponteland. While the two armies were there almost front to front, and war seemed imminent, the good offices of Richard, earl of Cornwall, and the archbishop of York brought about peace. This was ratified at Newcastle by a treaty and a charter of Alexander, by which, among other engagements, he confirmed the treaty of York concluded in 1237 in the presence of Cardinal Ottoboni. The charter was attested by the seals of four Scottish bishops and a large number of magnates, headed by Patric, earl of Dunbar, who swore to uphold the treaty, and undertook not to give aid to Alexander and his heirs if they did anything contrary to its engagements.¹ About the year 1244 Earl Patric, together with Earl Walter Cumin, made oath that he was not of the counsel or aid of those who sent men to attack or damage the land of the king (Henry III.) in Ireland or elsewhere, to the displeasure (in odium) or dishonour of the king, or that he had ever harboured any of the king's enemies, particularly William de Mariscis and his son. Among the knights who made oath with Earl Patric was William, his brother, and among the jurors was William, his son.²

A monetary transaction between Earl Patric and the monastery of Melrose, which took place not long before his death, is of interest in connection with the last action of his life, and as illustrative of the favourable view of his character with which some of the recorded incidents of his career appear to invest it. By a deed, executed August 29th, 1247, he sold, with the consent of his son and heir Patric, to the abbot and convent of Melrose his stud of horses in the fee of Lauder (totum equicium meum quod habui in feodo de Lawedir). At the same time he remitted to them any claim or suit he or his heirs might have for a stud of horses or other animals, in the lands and pastures the abbot and convent had in the fee of Lauder, on the day when the sale was completed. For this transfer he received one hundred marcs sterling, and his son Patric twenty marcs. Among the witnesses are Sir Patric, his son and heir; Sir William, his brother; Sir Robert, the scenschal, his brother; and Sir Malcolm, son of Wallene, his chaplain. The sale was confirmed by Alexander II., November 28th, 1247.¹ It was no doubt made for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the expedition to the Holy Land, in connection with the crusade which, originated by Lewis IX., king of France, was carried out the year following the sale of his stud, and in which Earl Patric had embarked. Later on in the same year there was some dispute, the nature of which does not appear, between him and Roger de Merlay in connection with the manors of Witton, Ritton, Stanton, and others, the lands given in dower by Gospatric, the brother of Dollin, to Ranulf de Merlay, great-grandfather of Roger, on his marriage with Juliana, daughter of Gospatric. The plea was heard at Cambridge; Earl Patric, who was defendant, had complained that there had been a false trial in the county, and four knights of the county had been ordered to bring the record before the justices. Both parties and the knights with the record were present, and a day was given for them to appear at Chelmsford. On the day appointed Roger de Merlay was present by his attorney at Hertford, where the justices were sitting, but Earl Patric was absent, and was amerced, Roger going sine die.²

Earl Patric appears to have left England to join the crusade about the middle of the year 1248. On June 28th he and another Lothian landowner, William de Lindsay, had letters of protection from the king, so long as they should be in parts beyond the seas, where, by the king's leave, they had already gone.³ A probable reason for his taking the cross, and consistent with the character of the earl, is given by Matthew Paris. He says that it was done in order that he might be reconciled to God and the blessed Oswin, whose house of Tynemouth he had unjustly harassed and injured, the special domicile, as it was, of the king and martyr, and where his body was laid to rest.⁴ The difference between him and the monastic bodies of St. Albans and Tynemouth arose out of the prolonged dispute between the lords of Beanley and the monks in connection with the villis of Bewick and Eglington, and the advowson of the church of the latter place.

Earl Patric never reached the Holy Land, having died on the journey at Marseilles,¹ probably in the autumn, for on December 13th the sheriff of Northumberland was ordered to give his son Patric seisin of the lands he held in chief of the king, to which he had succeeded by right of heirship, and for which the king had already received his homage.²

He married Euphemia, daughter of Walter, High Steward of Scotland, by whom he had three sons, whose names have been recorded, Patric, who succeeded him, William and Robert.³ With his wife he acquired in free marriage Birkin-side in Lauderdale, in connection with which estate there is a grant by him to the church of St. Mary of Dryburgh, made during the lifetime of his father, as he styles himself Patricius filius Comitis de Dunbar. He gave the canons a marc of silver, to be paid yearly out of his ferm of Birkinsyd, to be used for the building and repair of the church. The gift was confirmed by his widow, the Countess Euphemia, who states in her charter that it was 'de libero maritagio meo.' There is a clause in the deed which directs that after her death the alms shall be assigned to the abbey for a pittance,⁴ to be dispensed yearly on the day of her anniversary.⁵

Two stories connected with his liberality and forgiving disposition are related by the compiler of the Lanercost chronicle. He tells us that on a certain occasion when, as was his frequent habit, he had issued invitations for a splendid feast, many more guests came than preparation had been made for. When his seneschal pointed out to him that sufficient provision had not been made, Patric ordered the kitchen to be purposely (de industria) set on fire, preferring the risk of burning the house down rather than that his reputation for hospitality should be tarnished. The other story about his goodness of heart (de pietate) the narrator says he heard from one that was present. It happened that on a time he rescued from the gallows a robber condemned to death, and finding him, as he thought, trustworthy in doing his bidding, he at length appointed him his under chamberlain (subcamerarius). Afterwards, on a certain night, the thankless fellow, on making his master's bed, so arranged a dagger underneath the clothes that the earl ran it into his foot. In the general confusion which followed the rascal escaped, but, after the lapse of three days, was discovered in his hiding place. Earl Patric, in the nobility of his mind, made light of the malicious attempt, and hastening to the place offered to restore the malefactor, who confessed his crime, to his former favour. The man declined the offer, pretending that he desired to go on a pilgrimage, when the earl held out to him a purse of money as a gift to pay his expenses. He refused to come near his master and drew his bow, but afterwards picked up the 20s. which had been thrown to him though he did not deserve them.¹

His son Robert is a witness to a confirming charter of Earl Patric of a grant of Manderston by Stephen Papedy, son of John Papedy, to his brother Thomas and his heirs, rendering to Henry Papedy, on account of (pro dicto Stephano) the said Stephen and his heirs, half a marc of silver yearly. Failing Thomas and heirs, remainder to Thomas' next and younger brother and his heirs. Other witnesses to Earl Patric's charter are Dominus Waldeue, rector of Dunbar, and Dominus Henry, son of Waldeue. These details, which seem to be of sufficient interest to warrant being recorded here, are contained in a confirming charter of King David II., February 10th. 1366, Reg. Magni Sigilli regni Scotiæ (Record Series, 1814), p. 51.

What appears to be the same marc of silver was confirmed to Dryburgh by John de Dunbar, for the upholding and repair of the church. He calls himself son and heir of Sir John de Dunbar, lord of Byrkynside, who may have been a grandson of Patric, earl of Dunbar, and his wife Euphemia. Reg. de Dryburgh, p. 259.

Patric, the third of the name, was thirty-five years old when, in 1248, he succeeded to the earldom,¹ and had then a son of the age of five years. The noble character of his father does not seem to have descended to him, and he is described by the compiler of the Lanercost chronicle, who was well acquainted with him, as being very unlike his father,² and a man who was a prey to many vices.³ In the same chronicle there is recorded an incident in the life of his mother, during her widowhood, which refers to his conduct towards her. It also contains some details of much interest in relation to the domestic habits of a noble house of the time. The chronicler thus relates the story, with some remarks by way of introduction. The Lady Eufemia, he says, mother of Earl Patric of Dunbar, and relict of Master Patric, who died at Marseilles, sustained many wrongs, as we have seen, at the hands of her son, nor were they ever on affectionate terms, except when her son asked her forgiveness as she was approaching her end, on which occasion I was present.

It happened on a time in the days of the lady's prosperity, that a jester (joculator), who was well known to many people of position, came from the borders of England, and being entertained by her at Wytyingham (Whittingham in Haddingtonshire), brought her pleasant and prosperous news of her kinsfolk in England. Afterwards, when the lady was at dinner, she fell to discussing her family and her grievance, and then, being carried away by temper, uttered a malediction against her eldest son, all the others having been a comfort to her and he alone a burden. But the actor (histrion), who had an intimate acquaintance with the serious as well as the frivolous side of the courts of nobles (qui optime noverat curias optimatum tam serias quam insolentes), said ironically, 'you are wrong in uttering abuse at dinner; when it is over, make haste to the church and there on bended knees invoke a curse against your disobedient son.' The daughter of Eve readily agreed to this illusive advice, and her good-for-nothing counsellor followed her. When they got to the church and were both on their knees, the actor supplemented the mother's curse with one of his own: 'May a curse, evil woman, rest also upon you, who have not allowed your son to better his manners by attendance at the court of nobles, for as you have told me he never had an English governor or tutor.' The lady hung her head in confusion and was silent, for she admitted the truth of what he said.¹

Earl Patric attached himself to the party in Scotland which favoured the designs of Henry, king of England, and in August, 1255, having, by a skilfully contrived plot, induced the regents of the kingdom to leave Edinburgh, in conjunction with Alan Durward he surprised the castle and took possession of Alexander and his youthful queen. This action was rapidly followed by proceedings which brought about the dismissal of the other party, that of the Comyns, from the government of Scotland during the minority of King Alexander, and their replacement by Earl Patric and the other magnates, ecclesiastical and secular, who belonged to the faction which supported the English king.² On September 20th, King Henry, who was then at Sprouston, where he had come from Wark-on-Tweed, the castle of Robert de Ros, issued a letter patent in which he recites a letter he had received the same day from Alexander, who had been removed to Roxburgh. The letter informed him that, acting by his advice and that of his own magnates, among whom was Earl Patric, he had deprived his former council of the position and offices they held, and had appointed a new one, the members of which he made regents of the kingdom and guardians of himself and his queen. In this council the name of Earl Patric appears as fourth in the list of councillors, coming after those of the bishops of Dunkeld and Aberdeen, and Malcolm, earl of Fife. Consequent upon this arrangement King Henry entered into certain obligations on his part, and Earl Patric swore, by direction of Alexander and on the king's soul, that all the engagements should be carried out, Alexander placing himself under the compulsion and censure of the pope, should he fail to fulfil the terms of his oath.³ King Henry on August 10th had given letters of credence to Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester, William de Fortibus, earl of Albemarle, John Maunsel, provost of Beverley, and Robert Walerand, his senescal, addressed to Earl Patric and the rest who adhered to him in Scotland, and on the same day received into his protection Patric and the others, his friends and adherents.¹ The triumph of the English party did not long continue, and in 1258 a new council was appointed in which the Comyns, among whom were Walter, earl of Menteith, and Alexander, earl of Buchan, were predominant, the higher offices of the kingdom being placed in their hands and in those of their allies. The new order of things was acquiesced in by King Henry, who, on November 6th, issued his letters patent, assenting to the arrangement on the condition that the affairs of the realm were conducted according to God and justice, and to the advantage and honour of his son and daughter, the king and queen, and after the laws and good customs of the kingdom.² Earl Patric was not included in the new council, but two years afterwards, in 1260, when Queen Margaret went to the English court in anticipation of her confinement, he was one of the Scottish nobles into whose custody King Henry undertook to hand over the expected infant in case of the death of Alexander and his wife.³

Earl Patric as well as his father appears to have had money transactions with a member of another great Northumberland family. It is not apparent under what circumstances these transactions took place, though it may have been in connection with the crusade, in which his father had taken a part. In Michaelmas term, 1254, he was found to be indebted to Ada de Baliol, the wife of John fitz Robert, lord of Warkworth, and daughter of Hugh Baliol of Bywell, and the sheriff was ordered to distrain, and in the same term the sheriff of Northumberland was ordered to realize from his goods and chattels to the amount of 60 marcs, on account of a prest he owed Ada's executors, and of 70 marcs which his father owed. The money was to be delivered to the king in part payment of the sum Ada de Baliol owed him. Of this sum 29 marks were still due in 1261.⁴

The law proceedings, already noticed, which were being carried on in 1247 between his father and Roger de Merlay, concerning the services due to the earl from the manors of Witton, Stanton, etc., were not at that time settled. In 1263 the then Earl Patric appeared in a plea against Roger de Merlay, son of the former Roger. There was no appearance on the part of Roger, and the sheriff was ordered, for the second time, to attach him.¹

Not many years before his death he was engaged in a suit with a member of that branch of his family which held Edlingham under him, as sub-feudatories of the serjeanty of Beanley. On September 4th, 1284, an assize of mortancestre was arraigned against him by Richard de Edlingham concerning the manor of Edlingham;² what was the issue does not appear.

Nothing has been recorded of the public life of Earl Patric after the troubled time which succeeded the marriage of King Alexander to Margaret, the daughter of Henry III., until the events which followed on the failure of a direct heir to the throne of Scotland brought him into a prominent position. The year 1283 was a fatal one for the royal house. King Alexander's daughter, Margaret, queen of Norway, had died on April 9th of that year, leaving an infant daughter, Margaret, the maid of Norway. His eldest and only surviving son Alexander, who had been married in 1282, died on January 28th, 1284, and in the event of his widow not having issue, the maid of Norway became heir to the throne.³ A parliament was held at Scone, February 5th, 1284, when failing issue of King Alexander himself, and of the widow of his son, Margaret, princess of Norway, was declared heir to the Crown. In the list of magnates who obliged themselves to defend and carry out this act with their utmost strength, the second name is that of Patric, earl of Dunbar, the first being Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan, constable and justiciar of Scotland. Earl Patric and his son Patric had witnessed the marriage contract of Margaret's mother with Eric, king of Norway, made at Roxburgh on the feast of St. James the Apostle (July 25th), 1281.⁴ A story is told about a prophecy of Thomas the Rhymer of Erceldoune, in connection with Earl Patric, under whom he held land. On the day of the death of Alexander III., March 19th, 1286, the earl of March asked Thomas, who was then staying at the castle of Dunbar, if any extraordinary event would take place the day following. The Rhymer said on the next day there would be the greatest wind ever experienced in Scotland. When the king's death became known, the prophet declared that event to be the wind about which he had spoken to Earl Patric.¹

Earl Patric died August 24th, 1289, at Whittingham, in Haddingtonshire, at the age of 76 years, and was buried in the church of Dunbar,² having been in possession of the earldom above forty years.

He married Cecilia, daughter of John, of whose parentage nothing more is known, by whom he had three sons, Patric, who succeeded him in the earldom, John, and Alexander.³

There is no evidence to support the suggestion, nor was there any John Fraser living at the time who would answer the requirements of the father of Cecilia. Douglas, in the Peccage of Scotland, says he married Christiana, daughter of Robert de Brus the competitor, for which statement he gives no authority, and if he had a wife who was a daughter of a Robert de Brus, she could scarcely be one of the competitor.

His lands in Northumberland came, on his death, into the king's hands, and in his comptus of escheats for the eighteenth year of Edward (1289/90), Thomas de Normannille, eschaetor beyond Trent, before he delivered the lands to Patric, son and heir of the earl, rendered account of 113s., arising out of rents of tenants of Earl Patric, for lands held in chief of the king in Middleton, Skipleye, and Beneleye, due from Michaelmas to May 16th following.¹ On January 3rd, 1290, an inquisition was held at Witinham (Whittingham in Northumberland), when the jurors² found that Patric de Dunbarre, who held of the king in chief, was not seised on his death of any land in his demesne as of fee (in dominico suo ut de feodo), but that he was seised in his demesne as of fee of £14 4s. 4d. of rent accruing from the following places and tenements, namely: of the Lord Edmund, the king's brother, for the vill of Scippeley, 6s. 8d., which he holds of the said Patric; of John de Benley, for the vill of Benley which he holds of the same, £8; of Henry de Hildertone, for the three Midiltone with Rodum, 30s.; of John de Mideltone of a fine for a certain wayting formerly due from the said Patric, 66s. 8d.; and from all the said villis for cornage, 20s. yearly. The jurors also returned that Patric held all the said villis of the king in chief, together with Edlingeham, Lemotone, Wutone, Hayroppe and Hiddislee, which Walter de Edlingeham holds of Patric by that portion of the said cornage which attaches to the villis (per portionem ipsas villas contingentem de praedicto cornagio). They returned that Patric owed the king, for the aforesaid tenements, the following homage and service, to wit, suit at the county (court) of Northumberland. He also owed 30s. to the king, to be paid yearly into the exchequer at Newcastle, and 20s. for cornage, to be paid into the same exchequer. And above these services he makes for his fee (de feodo facit), inbourf and bonte-bourf on the march between the kingdoms of England and Scotland, as often as he shall be requisitioned by the sheriff. The jurors also find that his son Patric is his nearest heir, and is of full age, namely 47 years.³

Patric, the fourth of the name, earl of Dunbar, succeeded on the death of his father, August 24th, 1289, to the earldom, and to the Scotch and English possessions of his house. He appears to have been the first who bore the title of earl of March,¹ one which, to a large extent, displaced the earlier one, that of earl of Dunbar. Almost immediately upon his accession he took an active part in the affairs of his country. On March 14th, 1290, he attended the parliament held at Brigham (Birgham-on-Tweed), which confirmed the treaty of Salisbury, November 6th, 1289,² by which the conditions of the proposed marriage between Margaret, queen of Scotland, and Edward, son of King Edward I., were arranged.³ He appears to have been in the favour of King Edward, who, on August 10th, 1291, then being at Newminster abbey, made him a gift of ten stags.⁴

He became one of the competitors for the crown of Scotland after the death of Queen Margaret, when John Baliol was the successful candidate. His claim, which was formally made at Berwick, August 3rd, 1291, was based on the marriage of his great-grandfather, Patric I., with Ada, an illegitimate daughter of William, king of Scotland. As his claim had no validity it was ultimately withdrawn.⁵ In connection with his fee in Northumberland some proceedings in relation to the Crown may be noticed. On November 28th, 1292, he was exempted by writ of Edward I., who was then at Roxburgh, from common summons to the common pleas in the county of Northumberland.⁶ At the pleas of the Crown, held in January, 1293, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, before Hugh de Cressingham, and others, the king's justices, Patric de Dunbar was summoned to appear to show by what warrant he claimed to have gallows, infangenthef and fines for breakage of the assize of beer, within his manor of Benle, which belonged to the crown and dignity of the king, without having licence of the king or of his ancestors. As he did not appear the sheriff was ordered to take the liberties into the king's hand, and Earl Patric was summoned to attend on a certain day. As he did not obey the summons, the sheriff was directed to retain the liberties until the earl came to repledge them.¹ At the same court it was found that Earl Patric held Beneleye, with the three Middeltons and Rodom, by barony of the king in chief, and was inborgh and outhborgh 'inter regna Scotiæ,' and that he paid 30s. yearly to the king, and made cartage of wood (truncagium) to the castle of Bamburgh. It was also found that he and his ancestors had held the barony by the said service from a time before memory ran, and that nothing was in arrear of the said service.² Earl Patric's contumacy did not continue long after Beanley was taken into the king's hands, and on July 20th, 1293, the sheriff was commanded to restore to Patric de Dunbar, earl of March, the liberties and rents which by the precept of the justices itinerant, had been seised on account of his non-appearance to show warranty.³ King Edward, then at Portsmouth, on June 29th, 1294, summoned John Baliol, king of Scotland, by virtue of the faith and homage he owed him, to be at London on September 1st, with his men, horses and arms, to join him in the war against the king of France in Gascony. A similar summons was issued to Patric, earl of March, and many other Scottish magnates.⁴ On October 16th, 1295, King Edward ordered the sheriffs of the counties throughout England to take into the king's hand all the lands, goods and chattels of John de Baliol, king of Scotland, and of all other Scots who held lands, etc., within their bailiaries, and who were not living in England.⁵ Among these was Patric, earl of March, whose lands and tenements were ordered by the king's writ to the sheriff on December 30th, 1296, to be restored to him.⁶ When John Baliol made his alliance with Philip, king of France, and shortly afterwards formally renounced the fealty and homage he had sworn to King Edward, by an instrument delivered to that king at Berwick, April 5th, 1296, Earl Patric remained faithful to Edward. His wife, however, held the castle of Dunbar against the English when Edward sent the earl of Warren in command of a body of troops to capture it. The garrison after a time undertook to surrender the castle unless it was relieved within three days. The Scottish army, which came on that day, was totally defeated by the earl of Warren, and King Edward coming the next day, April 28th, with a large body of men, the castle surrendered without conditions, and many Scottish nobles were taken prisoners.¹

Some time in the twenty-fifth year of King Edward, but probably in 1297, Earl Patric had a gift of £20 for his expenses in returning to his own country (in partes proprias), most likely from attendance at the king's court. In the same wardrobe account, in which that entry occurs, are entries of payments made to Elias Spot, the earl's falconer. He had been with the king, in company with John de Birkenne, in charge of a goshawk (cum quodam astureo), which Earl Patric had given to the king. On April 30th, the king, who was then at Plumpton, gave him 50s. and licence to return to his lord, taking with him a falcon King Edward had in the castle of Dunbar the preceding year. On the same day the king gave him 16s. 4d. for the expenses of his journey of fourteen days from Plumpton, into Scotland, and for the feeding and housing (putura et limine) of the falcon. He was paid the next day a further sum of 11s. 4½d. to cover his expenses during seven days, at 12d. a day, in going from London to the king at Plumpton, and for the expenses of two horses and a groom (garcio), for seven days at 7½d. a day, while he remained at the court before he went to Scotland.² On May 24th, 1297, King Edward wrote to Patric, son of Patric, earl of March, telling him and other great people south of and beyond the Forth, that he had resolved to cross the seas as soon as was possible after Sunday next following the octaves of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, with his magnates and lieges. He told him he had enjoined certain matters he had much at heart on Hugh de Cressingham, treasurer of Scotland, and Osbert de Spaldington, who would Leland (Collectanea, ed. 1770, vol. i. p. 540) translates thus from the Scala Cronica: 'Patric, counte of Marche, with the blak berd, that alonly of al the nobles of Scotland remainid yn obedience of King Edwarde, complainid that the Scottes had taken his castel of Dunobar by Treyne. Apon this King Edward sent from Berwike Counte Waren and the Erle of Warwik with great pour by se and land to Dunobar, where were taken yn the castel the counte of Menteth, the Counte of Athele, the Counte of Ross, and six barons, John Comyn the yong, William Saint Clere, Richard Siuard the elder, John de Ynhemartine, Alexander de Murref, Edmunde Comyn de Kilbride, and beside twenty-nine knightes and eighty esquires, the which were sent to prison into diverse partes of Englande.' See Walsingham, Hist. Anglicana, ed. Riley, vol. i. p. 58.

Scala Cronica contains, in that part of the work which treats of the events of the time and locality within the experience of the author, a record of great value, as well from the personal knowledge of the writer as from its evident trustworthiness. It was compiled by Sir Thomas Gray of Heton, during his confinement for about two years in Edinburgh castle, after he had been captured at Nesbit, in August, 1355, by Patric, earl of March, and Sir Alexander Ramsay. An abstract in English was made by Leland, and is printed in his Collectanea.

intimate these by word of mouth to Patric; the king enjoined Patric to obey him on his allegiance.¹ In the year 1298, Earl Patric received two important posts, having, on May 28th, been appointed by King Edward captain of the garrison of Berwick, and on November 19th, captain of the forces, castles and other places which remained with a garrison on the march, and in the country south of the Forth. He had authority given him to direct any operations he might think it advisable to undertake against the enemy, and the commanders of the various bodies of troops were to be subordinate to him and to obey him.²

Shortly after midsummer, in the same year, King Edward entered Scotland, where some fighting took place. When provisions failed him he proposed going to Edinburgh, where he could obtain them by sea. Whilst he was preparing to advance, on July 21st, the earls of Dunbar and Angus came at daybreak with information to the bishop of Durham. They were taken by the bishop to the king, before whom they brought a youthful spy, who told Edward that the Scots were encamped at Falkirk, in the forest of Selkirk, but a few miles distant. The king, who passed the night near Linlithgow, the next day totally defeated the Scots under Wallace at Falkirk with great loss. He advanced at once as far as St. Andrews and Perth, devastating the country, and shortly afterwards returned to England by way of the western borders.³

About this time Earl Patric was employed by King Edward in a serious and delicate affair in connection with an outrage upon a lady of great position and possessions. On April 22nd, 1299, the king ordered Patric, earl of Dunbar, and John de Kyngestone, constable of the castle of Edinburgh, to make enquiry by a jury of men of Berwick, Roxburgh, and Edinburgh, into a complaint made by Johanna de Clare, countess of Fife, against a Scotsman named Herbert de Morham. She charged him that when she, with her attendants, was under safe conduct from the king on a journey into England, he had laid wait for her on the road between Stirling and Edinburgh, had carried her by force to the house of his brother Thomas at Gertrauk, and there imprisoned her, because she refused to marry him, being on her oath to the king not to marry without his licence. She also charged him with having taken her jewels, horses, wearing apparel, and other goods to the value of £2,000, to her great damage and discomfort, and in contempt of the king, who was much affected thereby. The enquiry was to be made in the presence of the accused person, for which purpose Herbert was to be brought under safe conduct from Edinburgh castle, where he was to be returned after the trial.¹

In 1300, King Edward, with a large army which had mustered at Carlisle, invaded the south-western parts of Scotland. The principal event in the campaign was the siege and capture of the castle of Caerlaverok, that marvellous structure of Scotch military and domestic architecture, which still remains, ruined and desolate, on the dreary shore of the estuary of the Nith, almost unrivalled in its picturesque beauty and old-world interest. Among the host of great nobles and warriors, whose banners marked their presence in front of the walls, were Earl Patric, comte de Laonis, as he is called in the metrical account of the siege, and his son Patric de Dunbar. The standard of the earl bore on a red shield a white lion rampant enclosed within a white bordure charged with red roses. The blazon of his son's shield was similar, but with a blue label upon it.²

In addition to the high offices of trust he held in the south-east of Scotland, King Edward committed to him posts of equal importance in Ayrshire and neighbouring parts on the opposite coast. Early in October, 1301, Montesyn de Noiellan, constable of Newcastle-on-Ayr, and others informed King Edward that they were in great peril of the Scots, who threatened Ayr castle and the country round it, and asked that aid should be given them with all speed. They further said they had heard nothing from Earl Patric, in whose hands, as they had been told, the keeping of the country had been placed.³ At the time he appears to have been receiving payment for this service, for on October 8th, in the account of the daily pay due to the king's army, 200 marcs are credited to Earl Patric, to whom it is due for keeping the sheriffdom of Ayr since Easter.⁴ On February 12th, 1302, Earl Patric agreed to take the ward of the castle and sheriffdom of

Ayr, as he had done by a former agreement, with forty men-at-arms until Easter, and after that date until Whitsuntide with twenty men, on payment of £20 for that term.¹ Nine days later, on the 21st, he ordered various quantities of wheat to be delivered to Sir Montesén de Noielan and others, then besieged in Newcastle-on-Ayr, where he himself was, and further quantities to be given to those who remained in garrison after Sir Montesén and Sir Edmund de Manleye, the sheriff, had left.² On August 15th, Earl Patric, being then at Roxburgh, made a further agreement to keep the castle and sheriffdom with twenty of his own men-at-arms from September 1st till Christmas for the sum of £100, receiving 100 mares in part payment on the day of the execution of the agreement.³ In the early part of the year 1303, King Edward determined to make an expedition in person against his Scottish opponents, purposing to be at Roxburgh on May 12th, and Earl Patric was enjoined to attend on the king with as many men-at-arms as he could muster.⁴ In connection with this or with other expenses incurred by his military requirements, it is not improbable that Earl Patric had pledged certain vessels of plate with Thomas de Tyndale for the sum of £26. The various articles were delivered on May 11th in the king's wardrobe at Newcastle-on-Tyne to Sir John de Drogenesforde by Thomas de Frismarisco, burgess of Newcastle, having been given to him for custody by Ralph de Manton, late cofferer of the wardrobe, who had released them. They comprised six silver dishes, of the value of 11 mares, 40d.; a silver flagon, weight 6 mares; a pair of basons, weight 7 mares; a silver pot, weight 2½ mares; and a silver gilt cup with stand and cover, weight 6 mares less 20d. In all of the value of £21 15s.⁵ Some time during the course of the year 1303, James de Dalileye, escheator south of the Forth, complained that the earl of Dunbar had interfered with him in levying the goods and chattels of such of his vassals who as felons and enemies had forfeited to the king. It was ordered that the earl or his bailiffs should be written to under the great seal of England commanding them to desist from the proceedings and to refund what had been taken from those who had forfeited.⁶

Notwithstanding the trust placed in him by King Edward and the responsible posts he filled under the king, Earl Patric does not appear to have satisfied him by the manner in which he conducted himself in those important commands. On March 2nd, 1304, the king wrote to him rebuking him for his slackness in attacking the king's enemies, and taunts him with the scolding lines :

'When the war was carried through,
Then his sword Audegier drew.'¹

The king further charged him by his faith towards him to remedy this by keeping a strict watch on the enemy with his own troops and others of the country. Special regard is to be paid to the garrison of Stirling so that in case they should break out and attempt to cross the Forth they may be resisted and harassed on their return. Patric was directed to write to the king, who has the matter much at heart, and to let him know what he has done and what he purposes to do.²

On March 27th, 1306, Robert Bruce assumed the kingship of Scotland at Scone, and two days afterwards was crowned. This event altered the condition of affairs, and King Edward, then aged and infirm, at once prepared to invade Scotland, upon whose soil, however, he was not again destined to set foot. He remained on the borders, sometimes better in health and sometimes worse, during all the latter part of 1306, and the first half of 1307. For several months he was at Lanercost, and afterwards at Carlisle, and in its neighbourhood, and on July 7th, 1307, he died at Burgh-on-Sands, within sight of the kingdom he had so long planned to make his own.³

Earl Patric, in spite of his apparent slackness, which brought on him the sarcastic rebuke of Edward I., appears to have obtained the confidence of his son and successor. On September 30th, 1307, Edward II. issued an order to John de Britanny, earl of Richmond, his lieutenant in Scotland, to proceed to Galloway in order to quell the action of Robert Bruce, who was burning and plundering the country and fomenting rebellion among the people. By the same writ the king commanded Patric, earl of Dunbar, to assist the earl of Richmond in this enterprise.⁴ On December 13th, the same year, King Edward, who was then preparing to sail to Boulogne, requested the Scottish ecclesiastics and the magnates of the same kingdom, among whom are mentioned Patric de Dunbar, earl of March, and his son Patric, to keep the peace in Scotland, and to obey the earl of Richmond.¹ Earl Patric did not long survive the accession of Robert Bruce to the throne of Scotland, having died October 10th, 1308, at the age of sixty-six years. He married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan, and left a son, the fifth Patric, who succeeded him in the earldom.

Though there can be no doubt that, like his predecessors, he must have had a 'great seal,' no example appears to be known. The only seal which now exists is one attached to the agreement (1291) of the competitors for the Scottish crown to accept the judgment of King Edward as lord paramount.² It is round, $1\frac{1}{8}$ inches in diameter. The shield, which is suspended, has on each side a flowing foliage pattern. Upon it is the lion rampant of Dunbar, within a bordure charged with eight roses. ✠ S DNI PATRICII DE DVNBAR CÖRTIS MARC.³

An inquisition was held on March 8th, 1309 (under a writ of diem clausit extremum, November 8th, 1308), at Felton, before Gerard Salveyn, eschaetor north of Trent. The finding of the jurors is very similar to that of the inquisition taken on the death of his father; the wording of the original will be found in the note.⁴ On November 10th, 1308, King Edward notified Eustachius de Cotesbach, chamberlain of Scotland, that he had granted respite of his relief to Patric, son and heir of Patric, late earl of Dunbar, whose homage he had taken. to carry out the king's orders, and not to distraint upon Patric.¹ In his account for the year 1309, Gerard Salveyn, the eschaetor, allows for 116s. 8d., arising out of the lands of the late Patric, earl of Dunbar, in Benesley, Ilderton and Middilton, from October 10th, 1308, on which day he died, to April 25th next following, when he gave seisin to Patric, his son and heir.²

King Edward, at this time, appears to have held Earl Patric in favour, which he showed by a personal gift, on November 3rd, 1309, of four casks of wine from the king's cellar, which was supplemented on December 18th by a present of two more casks.³ This good will continued to be extended to him in the following year, when, on April 7th, Edward issued a warrant to his chancellor, John, bishop of Chichester, directing him to cause Patric de Dunbar, earl of March, to be excused £30 due from him to the castle-ward of Berwick-on-Tweed for the current year, and afterwards for so long a time as the king pleased.⁴

Meanwhile the cause of Robert Bruce and the independence of Scotland were progressing, and in 1312 Bruce invaded England, raiding as far as the city of Durham, part of which he burnt. The position of the adherents of Edward II. in Scotland became a perilous one, and in the autumn of 1313 Earl Patric and Sir Adam de Gordon were appointed to lay the petition of the suffering people, principally those of the eastern marches, before the king, praying him to give them help.⁵ In answer to this petition, Edward, on November 28th, acknowledging their faithfulness and constancy, promised to give them aid, and to have an army at Berwick about June 24th following.⁶

Patric, the eldest son of Earl Patric, appears to have held land in Northumberland in 1314, either by grant from his father, or obtained in some other way, for in Michaelmas term of that year the sheriff was ordered to distraint upon him for relief of his lands held of the king, and also for the relief of his father Patric, for lands held by the father of his said father of the present king's father.⁷

Up to this time Earl Patric appears to have remained true to his English allegiance, and after the battle of Bannockburn, near Stirling, where, on June 24th, 1314, Robert Bruce completely defeated the army of Edward II., he is said to have sheltered King Edward, when he fled from the battle, in his castle of Dunbar, until he made his escape by sea to Berwick, then, as it had been for sixteen years, in the possession of England.¹

The progress of the Scottish independence under Robert Bruce was still making headway. In 1315 his brother Edward invaded Ireland, to be followed by Robert in the following year; a hazardous enterprise, but undertaken with the object of making difficulties for England, and so weakening the force of Edward's warfare against Scotland. Earl Patric, the brighter prospects of Bruce being probably the cause, now withdrew from the English party and policy, and became an adherent of the patriotic effort of the Scottish king. He was present at the parliament held at Ayr, April 26th, 1315, when the succession to the crown of Scotland was settled.²

Towards the end of the year 1317, Robert Bruce was engaged in an attempt to capture Berwick, which was ultimately effected. This, to some extent, was due to the agency of Earl Patric. An inhabitant of Berwick, named Peter Spalding, who was said to have married a relation of the earl, had a grievance against the governor of the place. Spalding wrote to Earl Patric, proposing on a certain night, to be agreed upon, to admit the earl's men into the town by a place where he, Spalding, was on guard. After communicating with King Robert Bruce, who ordered supports to be provided for him, the earl and his troops, aided by Spalding, after scaling the walls, on March 28th, 1318, overcame all opposition and took possession of the town.³ The castle held out for some time longer, but in the end capitulated to Bruce.

Some very interesting particulars connected with the history of the time occur in bulls of Pope John XXI., dated at Avignon, from January

Among other magnates, Earl Patric was one of the signatories.⁴

During the time which elapsed between the early part of 1320 and the landing of Edward Baliol, August 6th, 1332, at Kinghorn, in Fife, nothing has been recorded of Earl Patric connected with the affairs of Scotland. He remained, through that period of hostile relations and intermittent warfare between the two kingdoms, faithful to his country and her kings, Robert Bruce and his son David.

During the course of the war certain lands had been taken from the English king by Robert Bruce, and retained by him. In order to obtain restitution of these, Edward III., on December 20th, 1330, wrote to David, king of Scots, requiring him to restore them, under the terms of the treaty of peace, made between Edward and David's father, Robert Bruce.⁵ On February 3rd of the year following, Edward wrote again to David in the same interest, and requested him to require Patric de Dunbar, earl of March, to desist from hinderances and occupations of lands belonging to Lewis (Beaumont), bishop of Durham, and to restore to him the vill of Upsetlington, in the kingdom of England, which had been part of the patrimony of St. Cuthbert from a time before memory ran. On the same day King Edward wrote to Earl Patric to the same effect.⁶

Edward III., whose persistent design was to bring Scotland under his control, if not to include it in his kingdom, purposed to make Edward Baliol, son and heir of John Baliol, once king of Scotland, then living on his ancient patrimony in Picardy, an instrument in his policy. On July 20th, 1330, he issued letters patent notifying that he had taken Baliol into his protection, and given him safe conduct in coming to England, and remaining there and returning as often as it pleased him.¹ The plan for placing Edward Baliol on the throne of Scotland was brought to a head, with the connivance of the king of England, when Baliol set sail from Ravenspur, on the river Humber, in 1332, at the head of a body of Scottish nobles, most of them of English descent, who had been exiled during the reign of Robert Bruce.² Baliol, immediately after landing on August 6th, advanced northwards, and on the 11th of the same month, reached Fort Teviot. He was here opposed on the opposite bank of the river Earne, near Dupplin, by the Scottish army, under the command of Donald, earl of Mar, nephew of Robert Bruce, who, at a parliament held at Perth on August 2nd, had been appointed regent of the kingdom. About eight miles west of the main Scottish force, another large body of troops was encamped at Auchterarder, commanded by Patric, earl of March. Baliol, with a much inferior force, took the bold course of crossing the river during the night, and attacking the Scottish army. The enterprise was completely successful, and the Scots were totally defeated at Dupplin Moor with great loss, their army being dispersed. The regent and many other great nobles and persons of distinction were slain. The next day, August 13th, Baliol occupied Perth, and fearing an attack by Earl Patric and his troops, which had taken no part in the battle at Dupplin, he fortified the place. Earl Patric, having heard of the defeat of the main body of Scottish troops advanced against Perth, which he invested, crossing the site of the field of battle on his road. He was supported by a fleet of ten ships, which had arrived at the mouth of the Tay, under the command of a Fleming, John Crabbe, who had done good service for many years to the Scottish king. Crabbe, however, was defeated on August 24th, by the fleet which had brought Baliol to Scotland, with the loss of all his ships, which were burnt, when the earl of March finding himself in danger of starvation, the sea being commanded by Baliol's fleet, broke up the investment of Perth and dispersed his army.

Towards the end of the year, Earl Patric, in conjunction with Archibald Douglas, negotiated a truce with Baliol until February 2nd, 1333, with the object of coming to an agreement of peace. The treaty was not regarded as binding by the Scots, and Baliol was taken by surprise and attacked at Annan on December 16th, 1332, by a body of horsemen, under the command of Archibald, the youngest brother of Sir James Douglas, the lifelong friend and brother-in-arms of Robert Bruce. Baliol was defeated and at once fled across the border into England.

During the summer of 1333, Earl Patric being then in command of the garrison of the castle of Berwick-on-Tweed, and Sir William de Keith of the town, Edward III., who had advanced northwards with his army, and was at Tweedmouth on May 27th,¹ laid siege to the place. The attack was made with vigour and was as strongly met by the Scottish defence, which, in spite of some successes, especially the burning of a number of the ships of the English fleet, it was found could not be continued unless the town was relieved. On July 11th, Archibald Douglas, the regent of Scotland, arrived in great force, with the object of aiding the garrison by throwing troops into the place. Failing in this, he withdrew his troops and invaded Northumberland, hoping to draw off King Edward from the investment of Berwick. The English king, however, still prosecuted the siege, and the town having suffered much and being to a large extent burnt, a truce was agreed upon to last until sunrise, with a view to the capitulation of the castle and the town. It was arranged by an agreement, made July 16th, between the king of England and Patric de Dunbar, earl of March, and Sir William Keith, that unless before vespers July 19th, Berwick was rescued by a Scottish army crossing the Tweed at Berwick Streme on the west, or entering the land of Scotland by the Tweed and sea, or by 200 men-at-arms forcing their way into the place, it was to be surrendered.² On July

19th the two armies joined battle at Halidon Hill, when the Scots were totally defeated with great loss, the regent being mortally wounded. Berwick, according to the terms of the agreement, at once surrendered, the English king taking twelve hostages of its most eminent and honest citizens for the observance of the good faith of the town.¹ Almost immediately after the surrender of Berwick, on July 26th, King Edward took Earl Patric, his men, lands, rents and all his possessions into his protection,² and notified to his bailiffs and others that they were to defend and protect him and his men, and were not to take corn, hay, horses, carts, carriages, victuals, or other goods against his wish and that of his men. Two days later, on July 28th, King Edward gave an order to the chancellor to issue letters to Earl Patric, to whom, in consideration of good service to be rendered by him in the future, he had given land of the yearly value of £100 in his kingdom, to be held by Patric and his wife Agnes for their lives, and afterwards by the heirs male of their bodies.³

Earl Patric now went over to the English party, and at a parliament, summoned by Edward Baliol, which met at Edinburgh, February 10th, 1334, was one of the body of bishops and magnates who assented to the terms of Edward III., virtually putting their country under the control of the English king, at the same time handing over, as security for the fulfilment of the treaty, the castle, town and county of Berwick-on-Tweed, to be held by King Edward III. and his successors for ever.⁴

The favours which King Edward bestowed on Earl Patric immediately after the surrender of Berwick continued to be extended to him. This action of the English king appears to show how important was the position held by Earl Patric, and how necessary it was in the furtherance of Edward's policy to attach him to his side in the war then going on between the two kingdoms.

On February 28th, 1334, King Edward, then at York, gave authority to his chancellor (John Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury) to issue letters under the great seal to Sir Patric, earl of Dumbarre, empowering him to retain £30 due to the castle of Berwick from his lands in that shire, until the 100 marcs due to him from the king were paid. This was shortly afterwards followed on March 2nd, by an order of the king to pay to Earl Patric out of the exchequer as soon as may be, 200 marcs, in part payment of 400 marcs owing to him.¹ On March 3rd, the sheriff of Berwick was ordered by King Edward to empower Earl Patric, until an inquest was made, to occupy the lands and other goods of his Scottish tenants who had not availed themselves of the king's peace up to the quinzane of Trinity next, which Earl Patric asserted the king had given him.² In addition to other grants the earl had a gift of 600 marcs sterling from the king, and on May 13th, 1334, he gave a receipt for 100 marcs in part payment of the same.³ King Edward was then at York and it is probable that on a journey home the adventure occurred to Earl Patric, which Sir Thomas Grey has recorded, and of which Leland has given an abstract in his quaint language:—'The Counte of March held on the Engliche Kinges part, and cam to hym to Newcastle upon Tine, and goyng homeward agayn was sore hurt of ille people in Northumbreland for covetusnes of money that King Edward gave hym.'⁴

Earl Patric did not remain for long faithful to the English king, and at the beginning of the year 1335 he withdrew his allegiance and renounced the fealty he had sworn and the homage he had paid to Edward, who had favoured him with many courtesies.⁵ King Edward had in the latter part of the preceding year invaded Scotland, dividing his army into two parts, one of which, under the command of Edward Baliol, ravaged Annandale and advanced as far as Glasgow, the other division, under King Edward himself, had harried Lothian and the adjacent county. The county of Berwick, in which a large portion of Earl Patric's lands were situated, had at the parliament held at Edinburgh the preceding year been made over to King Edward by Baliol. It is not improbable that this invasion of Lothian, though Patric, who was present at the parliament, had assented to the transfer of the county from Scotland to England, and the fear that it might be the prelude to the destruction of his influence, was the motive which caused him to make his own fortunes neo with those of his country.

Through a great part of his life his allegiance to the English crown and his loyalty to Scotland were of a somewhat chequered kind. His changes of policy were perhaps as much due to the circumstances of his position as to any instability of purpose in himself. Though his lands in Northumberland were small in proportion to his large lordships across the border, and had by this time been all subinfeudated, it was still much to his interest to retain those ancient possessions of his house, on the score of sentiment if for no other reason. His great estates in the Lothians and elsewhere in Scotland were so close adjoining to England, and with the castle and town of Berwick in the hands of the English king, were so liable to be overrun and plundered, that it is not surprising that his policy was of an opportunist character. It required, indeed, a man of great strength of purpose and clear judgment to maintain a straight course under the very difficult contingencies which must have been constantly present to Earl Patric.

King Edward took immediate action upon the earl of March's repudiation of his allegiance. On February 1st, 1335, he issued a writ to the bishop of Durham (Richard de Bury), his chancellor, ordering him to send letters in favour of Henry de Percy and his heirs of all the fees of Earl Patric in Northumberland, and 12 marcs rent arising out of the vill of Benley, then in the king's hands by the forfeiture of the earl of March.¹ Shortly afterwards, on February 19th, the king issued a similar writ concerning the knight's fees of Earl Patric in Northumberland, namely: the homage and service of Sir John de Lylleburn in Benley; of Peter de Kyrkham in Tythlyngton; of Henry de Hilderton in Midelton and Rodum; of the earl of Lancaster in Shippeley; of Sir William de Felton in Eddelyngham, Lemochton and Neuton; of William de la Vale in Bramton; of the prior of Tynemuthe in Bewyk, Eggelyngham and West Lilleburn; of the master of Harope in Harope; of John Heron in Hygeley; of Sir Robert Somerville in Wytton Underwood, Horseley, Stanton and Wyndegates; of the abbot of Newminster in Ryton; of Thomas de Wyndegate in Wyndegate; with 19½ marcs of rent out of Benley, Hldreton, Midelton, Rodum, Sheppley, Edlyingham, Lemochton and Newton.¹ On the same day King Edward made a general grant to Sir Henry de Percy of all Earl Patric's forfeited fees in Northumberland, together with 12 mares of rent in Benley.² No record appears to be in existence of the forfeiture of the whole of Earl Patric's lands within the county of Berwick; there can be no doubt, however, that after his rebellion they were all taken into the hands of Edward III. A part of them was granted by the king on October 5th, 1335, when he notified his chancellor (John de Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury) that he had given the manors of Duns and Cherneside, which had been forfeited to the king by Patric de Dumbarre, late earl of March, to his faithful servant, Thomas de Bradeston.³ During the month of April, 1335, a parliament, called by the regents, the high steward and the earl of Moray, had been held at Dairsy, at which Earl Patric was present. On account of the dissensions which prevailed, due largely to the behaviour of the young duke of Athol, nothing came of it. Shortly afterwards, on July 11th, King Edward made an inroad into Scotland, crossing the Solway the same day. He was supported by a body of troops under Guy, count of Namur, who landed at Berwick, July 30th, and then advanced towards Edinburgh. He was opposed by the Scots, under the earls of Moray and March and Sir Alexander Ramsay, and battle being joined on the Borough Muir, the count of Namur was defeated, he and his troops being allowed to leave Scotland on condition that he undertook not to serve again against King David. On August 18th a treaty was entered upon at Perth with King Edward by commissioners on the part of the earl of Athol and Robert, the high steward, the regents, and on August 24th Edward took the earl of Athol into his peace, and restored him all his lands in England, which had been taken into the king's hands.⁴ This treaty was not agreed to by the earl of March and other two great Scotsmen, William Douglas of Liddesdale and Andrew Murray of Bothwell. They raised a body of troops, and attacking the earl of Athol in the forest of Kilblain, there defeated and slew him on the 30th of November.

The castle of Dunbar had meantime remained in the hands of Earl Patric. That great stronghold, placed, like Fast Castle and Tantallon, upon the rocky shore of the eastern sea, unlike them was possessed of a harbour commanded by the castle, and was a place of the highest importance to King Edward if he was to keep a secure hold on the county of Berwick. At the time Earl Patric was not within its walls, the castle being garrisoned by troops under the command of his wife Agnes, daughter of Thomas Randolph, earl of Moray, and sister of John, the present earl, a worthy scion of an illustrious house. A woman of great determination, courage, and withal resourceful and vigilant, Black Agnes, as she was called from her complexion, stoutly defended the castle, and became heroine of more than one story which has been recorded of a noble feat of arms. About the middle of January, 1338, William Montagu, earl of Salisbury, coming in force before the castle, laid siege to it. In spite of the persistency and strength of the attack and the state of famine to which the garrison was reduced, the countess held out until the siege had lasted into June, when the English army was withdrawn. During the course of the siege, after Easter, the earl of Moray was brought from Nottingham castle, where, after his capture, he had been confined, to Dunbar, and the countess was told that unless she delivered up the castle he would be killed. To this threat she replied that the castle was her husband's and had been given by him to her to defend, and that unless he ordered her she would surrender it to no one. In answer to the enemy, who said in that case her brother would be put to death, she rejoined, 'Then I shall be heir to the earldom of Moray,' for her brother had no children. The English, however, did not kill him, but took him back again to England.¹

It is recorded in story that when the engines of the English hurled stones against the battlements, the countess, standing by, showed her contempt for the futile result of the operation by ordering one of her ladies to brush away the dust with her kerchief. On another occasion, when the earl of Salisbury had prepared a formidable engine called the sow, and brought it up under the walls, the countess cried out, 'Look out! look out! Montagu, thy sow is about to farrow.' A mass of rock being discharged upon it from the walls, it was broken in pieces, when the men within it burst out from the now defenceless shelter.

The war still went on between the two countries, and came to a head at Perth, which had been throughout the centre of the English faction. It was in August, 1338, under the command of Thomas Ughtred, who had been appointed governor by King Edward.¹ The town, fortified by all the military art then known, held by a strong garrison and situated on the bank of a river accessible to the sea for vessels of ordinary size, was possessed of capabilities for defence which made it as difficult to wrest from the enemy as it was imperatively necessary to conquer it. Towards the end of 1338, Edward Baliol, who had made Perth the seat of his court and government, obeying the order of his lord, King Edward, had left the town to take up his quarters in England.

On the 26th of October in the following year Baliol was appointed to command the troops levied to keep order on the marches.² Robert, the high steward, who had been made regent on the death of Sir Andrew Moray, at once made preparation for attacking Perth. In the early part of 1339, in company with Earl Patric and other nobles, he advanced with a large army against the place, having in addition the assistance of five French ships with a body of troops on board. Perth for a time was stoutly defended, but on August 17th the governor Ughtred capitulated, when the Scots were about to storm the place.³

King Edward was now occupied with a war in France, and the Scots, first gaining possession of the castle of Stirling, then of numerous other places of defence, before long drove out the English from all the country north of the Firth of Forth. In 1340, a Scottish army, under the leadership of the earls of March and Sutherland, made an invasion of the north of England, but were driven back by Sir Thomas Gray.¹ In 1341, on April 17th, the Scots had obtained possession of Edinburgh castle, and a little later David Bruce and his queen Johanna, on May 4th, arrived from France at Inverbervie.

The effort of the patriotic party in Scotland to free their country from the English yoke and to overthrow the usurpation of Baliol was now progressing, and on March 30th, 1342, the castle of Roxburgh was taken by Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalwalsey. Shortly after, on April 3rd,

King Edward appointed seven commissioners, among whom were Richard de Bury, bishop of Durham, and Henry of Lancaster, earl of Derby, to arrange about a final peace or a truce between him and David Bruce and his adherents.¹ On the 20th of March preceding he had taken into his peace and given a safe conduct, until the coming Pentecost, to Adam, bishop of Brechin, Patric, earl of March, William Douglas, and two others, with 100 horsemen and 200 other persons, with horses and harness, to pass through England and those parts of Scotland then under his rule, to treat with him or his deputies about the proposed peace or truce.² The Scots had not accepted the truce heartily and their frequent inroads on the marches gave constant occasion for the vigilance of Edward Baliol, then in command of the forces on the northern borders of England. In 1346, David Bruce, finding King Edward occupied with the war in France, and acting on the prompting of the French king, made preparations for the invasion of England on a large scale, assembling his army at Perth. He began his operations in the valley of the Liddell, where the castle was taken by assault, and the governor, a knight of Northumberland, Sir Walter Selby, was captured and beheaded. David then advanced by way of Hexham, crossing the Tyne into the palatinate at Ryton, and on October 16th, encamped at Beaurepaire (Bearpark), a little more than two miles west of Durham, where the prior had a summer residence and a park. To meet this invasion, King Edward being then in France, on August 20th, Lionel, the king's son, with the advice of the council, appointed William le Zouche, archbishop of York, Lord Henry Percy, and Ralph, Lord Nevill of Raby, or any one of them, to command the forces of the northern parts of England summoned to resist the Scots.³ The English army assembled at Bishop Auckland, and on October 17th, they advanced by way of Ferry-on-the-Hill, where they met and discomfited, with great loss, William Douglas, the knight of Liddesdale. The two armies came in conflict at the Red Hills on Crossgate Moor, within sight of the city of Durham, at a place called 'Nevill's Cross,' from a cross which stood there on the way to Brancepeth, the site of one of the castles of the house of Nevill. The Scots fought with great bravery, but were totally defeated. King David was taken prisoner, numerous leaders, among them

John Randolph, earl of Moray, brother-in-law of Earl Patric, being killed. The left wing of the army, commanded by the high steward and Patric, earl of March, though it met with loss, was able to retire unbroken from the field, securing the retreat of the rest of David's force.

The death of John Randolph, earl of Moray, greatly altered the position of Earl Patric. Already a man who held, in virtue of his large estates and his own personal qualifications, a very high place among the magnates of Scotland, on the death of his brother-in-law, from whom his wife inherited the vast possessions of the house of Randolph, Earl Patric became one of the most powerful of the great Scottish nobles.

In 1350 negotiations were commenced with the object of concluding a peace between the two countries,¹ which resulted in a successful issue. David Bruce having, under the conditions of this agreement, entered into an obligation, confirmed by his oath, that he would go back into confinement if required, was set at liberty and allowed to return to his kingdom. On September 4th, 1351, seven sons of the highest nobility of Scotland became hostages that he would observe the terms he had ratified by his oath. Among these, the second on the list, was John, the son and heir of the earl of March.² The hostages were kept in custody in the castle of Nottingham,³ until March 28th, 1352, when by an order of King Edward, they were released,⁴ David Bruce having again become a prisoner in the tower of London.⁵ Rather more than two years afterwards, on July 13th, 1354, a treaty was concluded at Newcastle, when, for a sum of 90,000 marcs, to be paid by yearly instalments of 10,000 marcs, King David was released, a truce having meanwhile been maintained between the two countries. To this agreement Earl Patric was a party, and for its maintenance his son and heir, with nineteen other similar scions of great houses, became a hostage.⁶

Peace between England and Scotland did not suit the policy of the French king, and, in the spring of 1355, he dispatched to Scotland a small band of choice troops, under the command of a well tried and expert leader, Sir Eugene de Garencieres, who brought with him a large sum of money, 10,000 marcs according to Scala Cronica, and 40,000 gold moutons as Fordun states. Earl Patric, notwithstanding the truce of which he had been one of the principal promoters, became an active supporter of the French expedition. A body of Northumbrians had made a raid into Earl Patric's lands, and taking advantage of this breach of the truce, the earl of March appointed Sir William Ramsey of Dalwalsey to cross the border and attack Norham. The keeper of the castle, Sir Thomas Gray, led a body of troops to repel the Scots, who retreated, drawing on Sir Thomas Gray to a place near Nesbit, where the earl of March and the French, under Garenquieres, were posted. Sir Thomas Gray met with a complete defeat, and was himself taken prisoner and lodged in Edinburgh castle. Shortly afterwards, in November, the earl of Angus attacked Berwick from the sea, and having the support of Earl Patric and the French, he took possession of the town, but failed to capture the castle. King Edward, who had returned from France, came north and invested Berwick, which, on January 14th, 1356, was delivered into his hands.

A change of considerable importance now took place in the relations between the two kingdoms, when at Roxburgh, January 20th, 1356, Edward Baliol, titular king of Scots, surrendered all his lands and on the same day delivered over the kingdom of Scotland, accompanied by the giving up of his crown of gold, into the hands of King Edward of England.¹

All intimate connection with Northumberland had ceased since the forfeiture of the earl of March in 1335, and perhaps the account of him and his doings should then have been brought to a close. The many occasions, however, on which Earl Patric was brought into relations, sometimes friendly, at other times hostile, with the English king and party, seemed to give warrant for the story being still carried on. There appears, however, to be no reason to relate the further events connected with the life of the earl of March, which, indeed, form part of the history of Scotland rather than of England. With an account of his marriages, therefore, and of some other purely personal matters, the history of the great house of Gospatric, which so frequently exercised an important influence in the fortunes of the two kingdoms, is now brought to a close.

He married first, in 1303, Ermigarda, and secondly, in 1324, as has already been stated, Agnes, daughter of Thomas Randolph, earl of Moray, and ultimately co-heir of her brother John, by which marriage he became possessed of very large estates and influence in addition to what he had by inheritance. By neither marriage did he leave any issue.

In the year 1368, being then eighty-four years of age, he resigned his titles and estates, and died not long afterwards. He was succeeded in the earldom of March by his heir George, the eldest son of Sir Patric de Dunbar and Isabella, daughter of Thomas Randolph, earl of Moray, the sister of Agnes, Earl Patric's wife. Sir Patric was a son of Sir Alexander de Dunbar, a younger son of Patric, the third of his name, earl of Dunbar, who succeeded in 1248. The title of earl of Moray, which Earl Patric assumed after the death of his wife's brother John at the battle of Nevill's Cross in 1346, though his right to it is questionable, was not only used by him, as it is on his great seal, but was recognised in official documents of the kingdom of Scotland. His relative John, younger brother of George, was created earl of Moray in 1372.

Earl Patric had two great seals, one of which he calls, in the charter (May 24th, 1367) to which it is attached, 'sigillum magnum nostrum.'¹

The first, a small one, is round, $1\frac{3}{8}$ inches in diameter. Equestrian, to right. The earl wears a helmet with a fan plume upon it; a similar plume is placed on the head of the horse. On the shield is a lion rampant within a bordure, charged with eight roses. The same bearing occurs on the caparisons of the horse. ✠ S PATRICII DE DVNBAR COMITIS MARCHIE.²

The second and probably a later seal has an obverse and reverse, and is $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter. The obverse is equestrian, to right. On the shield is a lion rampant within a bordure, charged with eleven roses, which is repeated on the earl's surcoat and on the caparisons of the horse. On the top of the helmet is a crest, a horse's head, bridled, to right. ✠ SIGILLUM : PATRICII DE DVNBAR COMITIS MARCHIE :

The reverse has a shield within a cusped panel of six points, bearing a lion rampant within a bordure charged with eleven roses. ✠ SIGILLUM : : PATRICII : DE : DVNBAR : COMITIS : MARCHIE.³

In addition to his great seals he had three privy seals. The first is attached to the letter of the barons of Scotland to the Pope, April 6th, 1320. It is round, 1 inch in diameter, having a shield enclosed in an ornate cusped panel of three points, which bears a lion rampant within a bordure of eleven roses. ✕ S'PATRICII DE DVM MARC . . .¹

The second, which is appended to an acknowledgment of the payment of 100 mares, May 13th, 1334, is round, 1 inch in diameter. It is an early example of the use of a crest and supporters. The whole is contained within a cusped panel of four points, placed above a shield couché; supported by two savage men, is a helmet, barred in front, surmounted by a tower. Issuing from the top of the tower is a demi-nude female figure, who holds in each hand a coronet over the head of a lion, whose forepart projects on either side from behind the tower. Beneath the shield is a lacertine creature. The armorial bearing on the shield is a lion rampant with a bordure of eleven (?) roses. SIGILLVM COMITIS : DE : MARCHIA.²

A third seal is appended to two documents (October 3rd and October 5th, 1357) connected with the release of King David II. It is round, 1 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches in diameter. Within a cusped panel is a shield couché, surmounted by a coroneted helmet, supported on either side by a man, who wears a pointed cap with a tall plume, in front of which is a minute cross. Out of the coronet issues a horse's head bridled. The shield bears a lion rampant within a bordure charged with twelve roses. S' PATRICII . DE DVNBAR . COMITIS MARCHIE.³

There were two cadet lines of the great house of Gospatric seated in Northumberland, who took their name from places in the county where they were possessed of estates, and who remained for some generations in possession of them. The one branch, that of Edlingham, drew its origin from Edward, son of Gospatric II., and of this family an account is given here. The other branch, that of Kestern, so called from the place now known as Caistron, in the valley of the Coquet, also descended from Gospatric, brother of Dolfin, through his son, Edgar, who became the owner of Kestern and other lands by his marriage with Aliz, daughter of Yvo, son of Forne. Of the family of Kestern it is not necessary to say anything here, as it will be treated of under Rothbury, in which parish Caistron is situated.

Edward, son of Gospatric III., became the owner of Edlingham, no doubt by grant of his father, of whose serjeanty of Beanley that place was a member. Nothing appears to be known of him before 1176, when he must have been a man beyond middle age. In that year he and his son Waldeue owed 80 marcs to the sheriff for having justice done them in respect of their heirship, of which they had been deforced by Edgar, Edward's brother.¹ This entry is repeated in the sheriff's account for the next year, but in 1178 £37 16s. 7d. had been paid on account, and the balance, £15 10s. 1d., was discharged the year following (1179).² He also held land in Scotland, for in a confirming charter of King Malcolm III. to the abbey of Melrose of Herteshened and Spot, which had been given to the monastery by Earl Gospatric III., mention is made of land granted to the monks by the earl's brother Edward.³

The time of his death is unknown. His wife's name was probably Sibilla,⁴ and he had a son, Waldeue, who succeeded him.

Waldeue, who bore a name not uncommon in the family, was the lord of Edlingham in the latter part of the twelfth century. He confirmed to St. Cuthbert and the monastery of Durham the advowson of the church of Edlingham, with the chapel at Bolton.⁵ He also gave them the land lying between the wall and the church of St. Helen at Edeluingham.⁶ Some time before 1201 he granted to the canons of Alnwick a turbarry between Yerlessent and the boundaries of Lemocton, and 24 acres of land with appurtenances in Edlingham, and twenty cart loads (quadratas) of dead wood from his wood there. The canons were to have power to lead the peats.⁷

His wife's name was Auiza (?).⁸ His seal is round, $1\frac{7}{8}$ inches in diameter. A flower of eight petals. ✠ SIGILL WALDE FIL EDWARDI.⁹

He was succeeded by his son John, who, in addition to being called Johannes filius Waldeni, also appears as John Waldeue. The earliest notice recorded of him is in 1226, when he owed the sheriff one marc for a disseisin.¹ In 1228 he was engaged in a dispute with the convent of Durham. On the octaves of St. Martin in that year, the prior of Durham presented himself on the fourth day against John, son of Waldeue, in a plea of the advowson of Edelwingham, which he claimed against the prior. John, though plaintiff, did not appear, and the prior went sine die, and John and his pledges were amerced.² In 1234 he rendered account of five marcs for default, a purpresture and transgressions,³ and in the year following he owed 9d. for $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres of oats (an') at Biskeleg'; 9d. for $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres near the garden of Simon; and 3s. 9d. for $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres of oats in Edlingham.⁴ He gave a confirmation to Durham of the church of Edlingham with the chapel at Bolton.⁵ He granted to Newminster abbey, for the health of his own soul and that of Emma, his wife, the peat moss of Edlingham on the south side of the lake called Blakemere, with certain rights pertaining to it, his son and heir John, and John, son of Patric, giving their assent to the gift.⁶

In 1241, he rendered account for £100 of a fine for a trespass of John, his son. His pledges were John de Eslington, Gerard de Wodrington and others. The land his grandfather had in Scotland appears to have come down to him. He confirmed to the abbey of Melrose the grant of John de Methkille of the land of Panesceles, saving the service due to him. It was further confirmed by Patric I., earl of Dunbar, salvo servitio nostro de Johanne filio Wallcui.⁷

John, son of Waldene, was living in 1269, when John, son of John, son of Patric (probably the second John of the Kestern branch), brought an action of mort d'ancestre against him about a tenement in Edlingham, which he did not prosecute, and he and his pledges, John, son of William de Edlingham, and Richard, son of Thomas de Edlingham, were amerced.⁸

His seal is round, 2 inches in diameter, and bears on a shield, between three ears of corn, a lion rampant. ✠ SIGILL. IOHANNIS FILII WALDEVI.¹

He seems to have been the first of his line who assumed the local name. He is called 'Dominus' in some of his son's charters to Brinkburn priory.² The name of his wife was Emma,³ and besides his son John, who succeeded him as the owner of Edlingham, he had another son Richard.⁴

He was succeeded by another John, sometimes called John Waldom,⁵ who, like his father, became a knight. In 1253, during the lifetime of his father, the sheriff rendered account of 6s. 11½d. from him for 8 acres and 1½ roods of land at Baskel'.⁶ If John, son of John Waldene, is the same person as the owner of Edlingham, he had property in Crawley in Eglingham parish.

In 1269, Thomas, son of Thomas de Clenhull (Clennel), and Margery his wife, who had taken out a writ (breve) of warranty of a charter against John for a tenement in Crawlawe, failed to prosecute, and were amerced with their pledges.⁷ In the same year, at the same assize at Newcastle, enquiry was made if John, son of John de Edelingham, and his son Richard had unjustly disseised John, son of William de Alberwyke, of his free tenement in Edelingham, which seems to have been a messuage and thirty-seven acres of land, with appurtenances. They did not appear. He was also attached by his son Richard, and by another son Gilbert, and Richard in turn was attached by Thomas Gretword of Tossan and Thomas Gage of the same place, and was amerced. The assize was taken against them by default. The jurors found that John, son of William (de Alberwyke), had been unjustly disseised by John and Richard, and it was decreed that he should recover seisin, and John and Richard were amerced. Damages to the amount of 3½ marcs were allowed.⁸

The earliest notice of him as a landowner occurs in 1245, when, described as John, son of Sir John, son of Waldeve, he granted to Brink-burn priory a toft and croft in Little Tossan, on the west side of the vill, containing four acres of land.¹ A certain Helyas,² son of Huetred Helle, granted to Brinkburn three acres of arable land, of which one rood was upon the east alder wood among the cultures of Sir John Waldeve (super alnetum orientale inter culturas Domini Johannis Waldevi).³ This was confirmed by John, son of Sir John, son of Waldeve, who also confirmed by the same charter his former grant of four acres.⁴ By a charter in which he calls himself 'miles,' John, son of John, son of Waldeve de Edlyngham, gave to the same priory twenty acres of arable land in the vill of Little Fosson.⁵ In September, 1259, in the form of John de Edlyngham, miles, he granted to Brinkburn, common of pasture for all and every sort their cattle (averia) of all parts of their land (de omnibus locis suis), through all his land of Edlingham, far and near, on all days of the year, except on his defence of the east part, which leads from Edlingham to Glantiley, and except all the cultures of his demesne.⁶

He was living in 1269, when at the assize held at Newcastle, before Gilbert de Preston and others, justices itinerant, Richard, son of John Waldef de Tossan, Gilbert his brother, Alexander Wythman of Edlingham, and John Joye of the same place, were amerced, because they had not John, son of John Waldef, for whom they were pledges, to answer Walter de Edlingham and Isolda his wife, on a plea of agreement.⁷ This placitum conventionis had been made by a fine at the assize at Carlisle in 1256, between Walter, son of John and Isolda his wife, plaintiffs, and John, son of John, son of Waldeve (father of John), defendant. The matter in question was concerning $2\frac{1}{2}$ carucates and 24 acres of land, one mill, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ mares of rent in Edlingham, Lemmocton, Wutton, and Hydeslegh, which John acknowledges to be the right of Walter and Isolda by gift of the said John, to be held by Walter and his heirs, of

John and his heirs for ever, making to the chief lords of the fee the services due from the said tenement. John also granted that, from the day when the agreement was made, he would alienate nothing from the lands or tenements he then held, so that after his death all the said lands and tenements, with their appurtenances, should remain to Walter, as his son and heir, for ever. For this grant Walter and Isolda gave John a sparrow hawk.¹ Whether Richard and Gilbert, sons of John Waldef of Tossan, were brothers of John, son of John Waldeve (of Edlingham), for whom they were pledges, is uncertain, though, from the circumstances under which they are found connected, it is probable they were so related.

Under the description of John, son of John, son of Waldeue, lord of Eddelinge ham, he granted to Sir John de Eslinton, knight, and his heirs lawfully begotten of Johanna his wife, and to his assigns or to whomsoever, except religious (viris religiosis), they might assign them, certain lands for the increase of his land of Edelyngeham and of Newtown (Nova Villa), to wit, all Sorderelawehat, and so descending to the furthest part of Suthewellecroc, and so towards the west from the north part of Redepetheburne as far as the Harestan, and so ascending up to the Grenebanc, and so towards the south part as far as the long corner (angulum louge) of Blake Sorderellawe. He granted also that his men of the said vill, or any other duly authorised persons, might make a fence by Birlawe, according to the aforesaid boundaries, as previously accustomed and in no other way. John de Edelingham reserved the right to plough and to bring into cultivation ground in his waste, and to take marl wherever it should be found in the field. John de Eslinton and his heirs were to pay yearly one penny on St. John Baptist's day. The witnesses were Sir William de Lilleburne, Thomas de Riel, Sir Richard, parson of Roybur (Rothbury), Sir William de Flotwayton, William de Kirketon, John de Glantindon, H. de Riel, T. Oliver of Witingeham.²

He also gave to his son Richard and his heirs half a carucate of land in Edlingham and Newtown, with three tofts and crofts by certain boundaries, to wit, the toft which Agnes de Bartun once held in Newtown, with eighteen acres of land, pertaining to the said toft, namely, three acres in a toft and a croft in Moreside, three acres and a half at the Haufflat, one acre and a half and one rood nigh Keslicar, three roods on Laythal, three roods at High Alridene, one acre nigh Muselawe, one acre in Essildenside, two acres and a half and one rood on the Hoperig, one acre in the Langehope, one acre nigh the Battiwelle, half an acre nigh the orchard (polmatium), one rood [of land and] one acre of meadow in Essilside, with all the appurtenances belonging to the said land. And eighteen acres of land with a toft and croft, which Richard, son of Robert, once held in the same vill, and one acre of meadow in Essilside, and six acres of land with a toft and croft with appurtenances, which John de Anestey once held in the vill of Edlingham, by these boundaries, to wit, in a toft and croft five roods near the road on the east of Newtown, one acre on Smithiflat, three acres and three roods in the Theproke (Letheproke), on Siwardesstocfald ten acres. The capital lord of the fee and religious houses were excepted in the clause concerning the transfer to assigns. The animals of Richard and of those dwelling in the said lands were to have free access to all places (ibunt in omnibus locis), except the Hayning. Richard, his heirs and assigns, were to grind their corn at the mill of Edlingham without giving multure, and were to be free of suit of court and of all foreign service, as well as of ward and relief, and of pannage of swine and goats. They were to make an annual quit-payment of six pence, and were to pay yearly at two terms, namely, Pentecost and Martinmas, twelve pence in lieu of all services and demands. The witnesses were Sir Adam de Gesemue, then sheriff (1261-1264), Sir Robert de Manerio, Sir John de Eslinton, John de Benley, Alexander de Titlington, John de Kertington, Robert de Witinham and others.¹

Richard, to whom his father made the above grant, was probably the Richard de Edlingham who, in 1284, had an assize of mort d'ancestre appointed to give judgment in a suit arraigned by him against Earl Patric of Scotland, connected with the manor of Edlingham.²

The Caistron branch, as has been already stated, had some right in Edlingham, and, at the assize at Newcastle in the year 1269, enquiry was made if John, son of Patric, father of John, son of John, son of Patric, was seised, on his death, in his demesne as of fee, of a toft and 11 acres of land, with appurtenances, in Edlingham. The toft and land was held by Gilbert, son of John, who came and stated that the said John (son of Patric), long before his death, had enfeoffed his daughter Margaret, and had given her seisin, and that she in turn had enfeoffed

Gilbert. The jurors found that John (son of Patric) was not seised of the tenement when he died, and that it belonged to Gilbert. John, son of John (son of Patric), was amerced for making a false claim.¹

The first notice that occurs of Walter, the son and heir of John, is in 1256, when, as has been mentioned before, he and his wife Isolda were plaintiffs in a plea of covenant against his father about certain land, a mill, and rent at Edlingham, Leamington, Witton and Hedgley.² In 1269, at the assize held at Newcastle, John, son of John, son of Patric (of Kestern), was summoned to answer Walter de Edlingham concerning customs and services he was bound to make for a free tenement he held in Edlingham. The said John, as Walter asserted, held the fourth part of the manor of Edlingham of him, rendering (to Walter) yearly one marc and making homage and relief to him, and for scutage of the lord king, 40s., 10s. when it shall happen, 'et ad plus plus, et ad minus minus;' he also gave aid for making the eldest son of the king a knight and for the marriage of his eldest daughter. John admitted his liability to pay one marc, but for the rest he put himself on the great assize of the king. John de Oggille, John de Hertwayttone, Walter de Swetthorpe and Thomas de Bykertone, knights, were chosen to elect twelve (jurors), who were: William de Flotewarton, Thomas de Clenehulle, Robert de le Ferte, Robert de Bydlisdene, Robert de Luker, William de Muschamp, Michael de Kyllum, William de Haltone, Roger Maudut, Richard de Whelaund, Engram de Warenham, Robert de Maneriis, John de Herwaytone, John Oggylle, Thomas de Bykerum (Bykertone), and Walter de Swetthorpe. Walter did not prosecute his claim, and he and his pledges, John Gevener and John, son of Gilbert de Dalton, were amerced.³

In a list of persons in the county of Northumberland who were possessed of twenty librates of land and more, and who were not knights, though they ought to be, among those who did not hold in capite of the king is the name of Walter de Edlingham. By the writ of the king, in accordance with the return of the sheriff and William de Middleton and Walter de Cambhow, knights, made in the county court, September 22nd, 1278, these persons were ordered to be made knights before the Christmas following, and were to find sureties that they would obey the order. The sureties of Walter de Edlingham were Gilbert, son of John Waldief (possibly an uncle of Walter), John, son of John de

Edlingham, Adam, clericus of Edlingham, and Henry Tebaud of the same place.¹ On January 16th, 1286, Edward I. issued letters patent for Walter de Edlingham, who was going to the court of Rome, upon what business is not recorded. Thomas and Nicholas de Queneby were nominated (his attornies) until Michaelmas. On the 27th of the same month, Walter had protection up to the same term.² On September 10th, 1289, similar letters were issued for him until the feast of the Purification, Walter de Boulton being nominated.³ In 1286, being then described as Walter, lord of Edlingham, knight, he demised in fee farm to Thomas, lord of Dynillestone, and Lucia, his wife, to the longest liver of them and their heirs and assigns, the whole manor and vill of Hyggeley (Hedgley) at a yearly payment of 20 mares and 2d., the first term to commence at Pentecost, 1286. To the grant the seal of Walter is attached. It is round, $\frac{3}{4}$ inch in diameter. Two shields, side by side, are placed above a reversed crescent enclosing a star. On the dexter shield is a lion rampant,⁴ on the sinister an undecipherable bearing. ✠ s' DNI WALTI DE EDELINGHAM :⁵

⁴ The lion rampant appears as an armorial bearing first on the seal of John, son of Waldeve, grandfather of Walter. It was the arms of the parent house, the earls of Dunbar, until the bordure charged with roses was added; it is probable, however, that the tinctures were different in the two cases. It is not known what was the bearing of the other cadet line, that of Kestern.

In the nineteenth year of Edward I. (1290-1291), Hedgley was in the possession of the lady Lucia de Devilston. Her husband Thomas was dead in 18 Edw. I. (1289-90),¹ and in accordance with the grant of Sir Walter de Edlingham, who was probably either her brother or father, his widow was the owner of the manor. She was dead in 11 Edw. II. (1317/8).²

In an extent made by Adam de Bentou in 1290-1291 (19 Edw. I.) of the manor of Hedgley (Hyggsley), which had been granted in 1286 by Sir Walter de Edlingham to Thomas, lord of Dyuilleston, and Lucia his wife, the demesne lands of the lady (Lucia) of Diuilston are set out in parcels as follows: twelve acres above the Sartbryg, each worth 2s. an acre; eleven acres, each worth 15d.; eleven acres at le halu and the Stanys, worth 12d. an acre; eleven acres at Langelange and Trodelflat, each worth 12d.; one acre at Crofthil, worth 3s.; one acre at the garden, 3s.; at the [deed damaged], eleven acres, each worth 15d.; Nunyard and Edisacre, Caleyard and Lamyacres, containing in all six acres, worth 12d. an acre; at Stanyhalu and Thornwod thirteen acres, worth 10d. an acre. Nicholas the bailiff held the whole. The amount of rent was £4 16s. 4d. Also of the demesne (the bailiff?) held, at Makeles, in a place called le pullis, eight acres, worth 15d. an acre, and at le Pulburne fifteen acres, worth 15d. an acre. Thomas Uncuthman held eight acres of the demesne, worth 15d. an acre; W. Barly held one acre of the demesne, worth 14d.; Adam Godlad half an acre of the demesne, worth 6d. In the hand of the lady at Crodbotflat were ten acres, worth 2s. an acre, and also in her hand at the garden was one acre, worth 3s. The lady Lucia held of meadow one acre, worth 2s., and at le pullys one acre and one rood worth 2s. 6d.; the herbage of half an acre at le pullys was worth 9d.; the sum 28s. 3d. The herbage at le halu was worth 2s., and the whole sum was 42s. 5d., beside those which were in the hand of the lady.

Husband[land]. Radulf de aula held thirty-six acres, and rendered 20s. per annum; Adam, son of Thomas, eighteen acres for 12s. yearly; John, son of Waldeue, eighteen acres for 12s. yearly; Henry Tebald, the same quantity at the same rent.

There were six cottars (John de Templo, Adam, son of Hugh, John Cumpas, Richard Woodward, Hugh, son-in-law (gencr) of Patrick, William Barly), who each held three acres of land and paid 3s. per annum. Adam Godlad held half-an-acre and paid 3s. per annum; Emma Otre held one rood and paid 22d. per annum; Cristiana de Craulan held a cottage and paid 12d.; Radulf de aula held the brewhouse, with one acre and one rood, and paid 6s.; Nicholas (the bailiff), for a certain rood rendered twenty-four chickens (pullos), the price of each, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Also the lady received from each house for nuts a hen worth 1d. The mill returned six mares. The sum total was £8 5s. 10d., chickens and hens and works being excepted.

There was received from each selfode¹ three meals (dictas) or 3d., except from the selfodes of John de Somervile, dwelling on his land, and if they abode outside his land they do service (si extra terram suam moram faciant faciunt servitium).²

In the court of William de Vesci, held at Alnwick on the day of the translation of St. Augustine, 1294, Walter de Edlingham, son of John Waldom of Edlingham, granted for a certain sum of money, to William de Vesci, his heirs and men or his tenants in Swyneleischeles, common of pasture with him and his men everywhere within the limits of the pasture of Edlingham. The right was to extend to all his cattle (pecora) and to any kind of animal there feeding, except in the demesne and the Hayninge. The witnesses were Robert de Hilton, Walter de Camhon, Franco le Treis, knights, Richard de la More, Gilbert de Edelingham, Alexander de Cheswyk and John de Benley, then bailiff of Earl Patric at Edlingham.³

Walter de Edlingham appears to have already commenced the dispersal of the lands which had been for five generations in possession of his family, and which before long resulted in the alienation of the vill and manor of Edlingham and all its appurtenances. He granted, probably in 1295, to William de Felton and Eustancia his wife a messuage in Edlingham called Rueley and six acres of land in the field of the same place, three acres of which were in Chesterflat and other three were called Dedmanslive (in his son Thomas's inspecting charter the word is Dedmanshameroke), and an acre of meadow called Potterakir, with a toft and a croft in the vill of Edlingham, which Graunger formerly held, lying between the toft of Richard P'de (Pride) and the toft (manerium meum in Thomas's inspeximus) of the said Walter, and ten acres of arable land in the field of Edlingham, pertaining to the said toft and croft, and all the wood called Esselde, by its boundaries, beginning at Dalycroke, and so descending by Rueley muse (mure in Thomas's deed), and so by the sike descending to Esseldeburne and then ascending by the same burn as far as Esselford, where the road goes from Lurbotil towards Edlingham, and from Esselford ascending by Coveburne as far as Meldircoveslade, and from thence ascending as far as Meldircove, and from there to the Hangandstane, and from that stone as far as the Okiheved (Alrihewed in Thomas's deed), and from the Okiheved as far as Ebscove, and from thence direct (linealiter) to Dollicroke. The usual service was to be made to the capital lords of the fee, and a pepper corn was to be paid yearly at Christmas to Walter and his heirs if demanded. The witnesses were Sir Hugh Gubyun, then sheriff of Northumberland (1293-5); Sir Robert de Glantone, Sir Walter de Burudene, knights; Hugh Galun, John de Braton (Brompton in Thomas's deed), Gilbert (William in Thomas's deed) de Edlingham. The witnesses to the inspeximus of Thomas, son and heir of Sir Walter de Edlingham, were Sir John de Kirkeby, then sheriff of Northumberland, Robert Bertram of Bothal, William de Hauilton, Hugh Galoun, Nicholas Wygrus, William de Echewyk, William de Distington, William de Welteden, clerk.

This was followed by a grant of the whole manor of Edlingham, with all the demesne and appurtenances and other rights, by Walter, lord of Edlingham, to William de Felton and Eustancia his wife. The charter itself does not appear to exist, but is recited in an inspeximus of Thomas, his son and heir.¹

The witnesses to the inspeximus are: Sirs J. de Kirkeby, then sheriff of Northumberland, Hugh Gobuin, Walter de Boroudon, knights, Hugh de Galoune, William de Edlingham, Adam Meyneull, William de Echewyk, Nicholas Wygrus, William de Welteden, clerk, and others. Cartae Swinburne, vol. i. p. 30.

The transfer of Edlingham was further completed in 1296 by a quit-claim from Thomas, son and heir of Sir Walter de Edlingham, knight, to William de Felton and his wife Eustantia. By this deed he remits all right and claim he has by hereditary right, by the death of his father Walter and his mother Isolda, in the whole vill of Edlingham, with the mill of the same, as well the manor, demesne, meadows, woods (tam manerio, dominicis, pratis, boscis), and all other appurtenances, without any reservation, as in services of free tenants, bonders (bondis) and their issue (sequelis), wards, reliefs, escheats, and with all dues and rents (proventibus et commoditatibus) in all places, which in any way from the aforesaid vill, with the mill, etc., may accrue. He also remits all claim to a toft called Ruely in the vill of Edlingham and to six acres of arable land in the field of the same vill, with one acre of meadow called Potteracre, and in the toft and croft which Granger once held, with ten acres of arable land in the field of the same vill and in the wood of Esselde. He further remits all claim to an annual rent of two mares sterling received yearly out of the vill of Lemocheton, with the demesne of the same, and in the demesne of two other villis, Higley and Crawlawe. The witnesses were: John de Kirkeby, then sheriff of Northumberland; William de Hamilton, Hugh Gubium, knights; Hugh Galoun, Gilbert de Edlingham, Thomas Scot of Whatton (?) and others. The quit-claim was executed immediately after June 29th, 1296, at Bellum Mariscum (Beaumaris). Another quit-claim had been made by Thomas to William de Felton and Eustantia of the manor of Edlingham and the vill of Lemochton at Beaumare on the Sunday after the feast of Trinity, 1296.

About the same time Thomas de Edlingham accepted, ratified and confirmed the grant his father, Sir Walter de Edlingham, had made of his own free will to Alexander de Cheswyk and Juliana, his wife, and their heirs of a piece of land called le Grene in the vill of Newton, in the tenement of Edlingham, and of two tofts and two acres of land in the same vill, lying between the land of Sir John de Hertwayton and that of Gilbert de Edlingham. The witnesses were Sir Nicholas de Punchardon, Sir John de Eslinton, Sir Robert de Glantone, knights, Hugh Galun, Simon de Titlington, Gilbert de Edlingham, Richard Oliver and others.

Sir Walter de Edlingham must have been dead before the middle of 1296, when his son and heir, Thomas, quit-claimed his right in Edlingham, but he was alive in 1295, and was then in the service of Edward I. as governor of Beaumaris castle in Anglesea.¹ The grants by Thomas de Edlingham made to William de Felton and Alexander de Cheswick in 1296 are dated at Beaumaris, where Thomas must then have been. It is probable that he was there at the time when his father was governor of the castle, and he may have remained there after his father's death, possibly in the service of King Edward.

Nothing more appears to have been recorded of Thomas de Edlingham after he severed, in 1296, his connection with Edlingham by his quit-claim of the vill and other rights there. The vill had been held by five generations of his ancestors, and with him there came to an end the interest of the house of Gospatric in the place from which one branch of the family took its name. If he left descendants, nothing is known of them, nor does the name occur after that time attached to any person of sufficient position to entitle it to be written in the annals of the county, either official or private.

EDLINGHAM TOWNSHIP.

The township of Edlingham contains the castle, church, vicarage, hamlet, and mill of Edlingham, the homesteads of the Castle-farm, the Demesne, the Newtown, Flamborough, Wandy-house, etc., and comprises an area of 5,817 acres, the whole of which, with the exception of the church, parsonage, and glebe, belongs to Sir John Swinburne, bart., of Capheaton. The population in 1901 was 74.² The township is watered by the Wandy and Rimside burns, which, rising on Rimside moor and fed by several small watercourses or latches, such as Widehope-latch, Corby-latch and Millstone burn, unite in the Edlingham burn, an affluent of the Aln. The enclosed lands, once largely in tillage but now almost wholly laid down to grass, comprise about 2,000 acres, the remainder of the township being unenclosed and open moor, in its season purple with heather. The parish boundary on the east passes through a sheet of water called the Black Lough. Scattered over the moors are places and objects with such names as Bigge's Pillar, Corby Crag, Grey Stone Knowe, Nanny Felton's Cairn, Redheugh Crag, Senna Wells, and Wheatfolds. Near the western march are the sites of two camps, hitherto unexplored, and an ancient wood called Roughlee-wood.

As the history of the township, to the time of its acquisition in 1296 by William de Felton, has been fully set out in the account of the house of Gospatric, it is unnecessary to recapitulate it. Although the new lord of Edlingham bore a local name, it is by no means certain that he came from a local stock,¹ unless, indeed, he sprung from a younger son of the great family of Bertram of Mitford, who had adopted a territorial name.² The surname of Felton³ does not appear in Testa de Nevill either as a landowner in Northumberland or in any other county in England. The name first appears in the Close Rolls on November 7th, 1278,⁴ when William de Evereus acknowledged that he owed William de Felton 100s., to be levied in default of payment on his lands and chattels in the counties of Derby and Stafford. In the same year he and certain others had quittance of the common summons of the eyre in the county of Northumberland.⁵ On April 25th, 1285, Thomas de Newton of Newcastle acknowledged that he owed William de Felton 40 marks.⁶ On April 26th, 1286, William de Felton, going beyond seas with the king, had protection for one year.⁷ On May 4th, 1290, William de Felton and Peter de Cornille, the king's esquires, who were charged with the carrying of 'certain bulls,' relating to the king's son's marriage, to the king's envoys in Scotland, were allowed 9s. each for their going and returning, viz., for eleven days at 4½d. per day; and inasmuch as the king had ordered them to use haste, they were allowed 6s. 9d. over and above for hired horses while their own recruited by the way.⁸ On February 2nd, 1291/2, William de Felton, described as the king's yeoman, obtained for his good services the custody of the lands and the marriage of the heir of Gilbert de Middleton, deceased, a tenant in chief, with dowers when they fell in.¹ In 1293 he had a licence to exchange a rent of 16s. a year in Newcastle with the prior and convent of Brinkburn, for two messuages and thirty-three acres of land in Thirston.² He was appointed constable of Beaumaris castle³ before August 24th, 1295, when he had protection for one year on his going to Ireland.⁴ On April 8th, 1298, as constable of Beaumaris, he was commissioned to array 500 Welsh foot in the parts of Anglesea,⁵ and three months later, he fought at the battle of Falkirk, on July 22nd, where his 'ferrand pomele' horse, of the value of 38 marks, was killed.⁶ On December 20th following, in lieu of the sum of £128 10s. 7½d., due to him for his wages and for moneys expended on the works at Beaumaris castle, he was granted the custody of the lands which William Heron, deceased, held in chief in Northumberland, as well as of the lands which Walter Heron, son of the said William, held in Yorkshire, and the marriage of Emmeline, Walter's daughter and heiress.⁷ The name of Felton does not appear on the subsidy roll of 1296 for Edlingham.

1300, obtained repayment, made from the controller of the wardrobe, for lances purchased for the five royal standards for the Scottish wars, viz., for two standards of the arms of England, for a third standard of the arms of St. George, for a fourth of St. Edmund, and for the fifth of St. Edward.¹ In the following year, on May 12th, he, with others, was appointed a commissioner to raise 2,700 footmen to meet the king at Berwick at midsummer, to proceed against the Scots.² On September 1st, 1302, Sir William de Felton undertook to keep the castle and town of Linlithgow until the following Christmas, with 83 men-at-arms and 100 foot, who were at that time working at the castle. Sir William's seal in red wax is appended to the document; it is broken and defaced, but it seems to be charged with a lion passant in chief,³ and there may have been a baton. A seal is also appended to an attestation or certificate given in 1303, that Richard de la Chaumbre had a 'morel' baggage horse dead at the 'pele of Linlithgow'; it bears a lion passant charged with a baton.⁴

In or before 1304 Sir William de Felton had obtained the custody of the lands of Sir Thomas de Soules, in the parish of Stamfordham, and was accused to the king by Alice de Soules,⁵ the widow of Sir Thomas, of having deforced her of her dower. She was directed to sue him in chancery.⁶ About this time William de Felton granted a messuage and lands at 'Wyden'⁷ to the prior and convent of Carlisle, who, February 2nd, 1304/5, obtained a licence to take it in mortmain.⁸ In the following month he obtained an order on the chamberlain of Scotland for £138 12s. 2½d. for arrears of pay.⁹ In the following October his fee as keeper of the pele of Linlithgow was £40.¹⁰ In May, 1307, the bishop of Chester borrowed the castle of 'Comenogh,' or 'Cumnoch,' lying between Lanark and Ayr, from its owner, Earl Patric, and garrisoned it with 30 men-at-arms and 100 foot, under the command of Sir Ingram de Umframvill and Sir William de Felton, a proceeding which gave so great satisfaction to Edward I., who was then at Carlisle, that he kissed the bishop when he told him what he had done,¹ and the castle was ordered to be stored by the treasurer and the guardian of the wardrobe.² The sum of six pounds and six shillings was allowed to Sir William de Felton and Sir John Comyn, knights, and five esquires for going on the raid to Glentruyl in search of Robert de Brus. The expedition occupied fourteen days, and the knights were allowed 2s. a day and the esquires 12d.³ William de Felton, who, in 1308, was appointed one of the conservators of the peace for Northumberland,⁴ in the following year had to surrender Thomas de Soules's lands at the Heugh in Stamfordham, which he held as tenant at will.⁵ In 1309 he had a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Edlingham, Matfen, Lemington and Lorbottle, and in his manor of Boddington, Northamptonshire.⁶ Arnald de Cames, sergeant-at-arms to Edward I., having been killed at Bolton, near Edlingham, a commission of oyer et terminer was issued, April 18th, 1312, to William de Felton and Thomas de Fyssheburne to try the persons accused.⁷

In 1311-1312, Sir William de Felton and his sons John and Robert were doing garrison duty in Scotland, accompanied by some of their own name and other retainers from Northumberland.⁸ His own charger was given to him by the king, but he lost other horses, for the restoration of which, as well as for arrears of wages, and for the debts of Philip de Oulcotes (Ulcotes), he obtained an order in 1312 upon the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer to allow him the sum of £12.¹ On May 30th, 1312, William de Felton was appointed sheriff of Northumberland.² It appears from his compotus of November 2nd, 1313, that he had several Scottish prisoners in the castle at Newcastle.³ He is styled sheriff at Trinity term, 1315, when he obtained an order for the repayment of £6 1s. 4d., charges for maintaining Sir Walter de Moray, a Scottish prisoner, at 4d. a day.⁴

By a deed no longer extant, Sir William de Felton seems to have granted the lordship of Edlingham, lands in Newtown, Lemington, Whittingham, etc., and also the manor of Boddington in Northamptonshire, to Robert de Felton, who in 1315 re-granted these estates to Sir William in tail male, with remainders to Robert Delaval and Alice, his wife, and the heirs male of Alice, then to John de Fenwick and Eleanor, his wife, and the heirs male of Eleanor, with ultimate remainder to William de Felton's right heirs.⁵ This settlement regulated the descent of Edlingham for a considerable period, and was adduced as late as 1372⁶ to defeat an attempt to apply the legal doctrine that succession followed the whole blood.

No inquisition on the death of Sir William de Felton has been found, but he was dead before May 11th, 1328, when the escheator beyond Trent was ordered to divide the lands of Constance, formerly wife of William de Felton, held by the said William by the courtesy of England, into three parts; the division was to be made in the presence of Elizabeth, the second daughter, and in that of Robert de Strelly and Constance his wife, the third daughter. The purparty of Robert Bertram and Margaret his wife (the eldest daughter) was set off to them at that time, but Constance, wife of Robert de Strelly, did not have scisin of her purparty until the following October 26th.⁷

⁷ Amongst the Durham Palatinate papers there is an inq. p.m. Robt. de Felton, 27 Bp. Hatfield, taken at Durham, September 22nd, 1371, which recites that Robert de Felton had granted his manors, etc., to William de Felton for life, remainder to William, son of William de Felton, and the heirs of his body. That William, son of William, had issue a son William by one wife and John by another wife, which William, after the death of William son of William his father, entered upon the said manors, but died without heirs of his body; and John, the brother of the last-mentioned William and son of William, son of William, aged 30 years, is by reason of the fine next heir in tail. *45th Report of Dept. The Robert de Felton first mentioned in the Close Rolls in 1286 was probably a brother of Sir William de Felton. In that year he obtained an order upon the keeper of Kynefar forest to be supplied with two good oaks fit for timber.¹ For his services in Flanders he obtained, in 1298, a grant of the marriage of Patrick, son and heir of David de Graham,² and in the winter of the same year he commanded the bowmen at Lochmaben.³ In October, 1299, he wrote to the king that he had attacked the castle of Caerlaverock in Nithsdale, had slain the constable, Robert de Coningham, and had set up his head on the great tower of Lochmaben. He begs that the king will give command to the treasurer to let him have his robes, for, never since he was with the king, as God aid him, has he had any clothes, and he cannot leave the castle,⁴ of which he was constable, to buy them.⁵ In 1301 he obtained the marriage of Thomas, son and heir of Warin Mauduit.⁶ He was probably still at Lochmaben in 1307, when James Dalilee was ordered to furnish him with a tun of good wine.⁷ Two years later he was granted the custody of the lands and the marriage of the heir of Isabella, widow of John fitz Hugh.⁸ On December 20th, 1309, he was captain of forty men-at-arms, who formed part of the force given to Sir Robert de Clifford, knight, warden of Scotland.⁹ In 1312 he obtained the manor of Shotewyk, county Chester,¹⁰ and also the custody of Scarborough castle, which Henry de Percy was ordered to deliver up to him.¹¹ He was the feoffee of Edlingham in 1315, and in 1316 he had a grant, to hold during pleasure, of the lands of Henry de Prendreguest in Akeld and Ewart, which had been escheated to the king.¹² He seems to have had a son John,¹³ and perhaps other issue.¹⁴

On December 30th, 1315, the constablenesship of Alnwick was granted to a John de Felton for nine years;¹ he was also constable of Newcastle in 1317.² He may be identified with the son of Sir William de Felton.³ He was surety in 1314 for a certain Edmund le Leche who had set off for Berwick with victuals for the king's lieges.⁴ In 1320 he acknowledged that he owed 24 mares to William Galon, to be levied, in default of payment, on his lands and chattels in Norfolk.⁵ In 1322 he was keeper of the manor of Hodynet and of the town of Moston.⁶ On February 10th, 1326/7, a pardon was issued to Sir John de Felton, knight, for holding Caerphilly castle against Queen Isabella, for invading Normandy, and for committing depredation when the king was there.⁷ Five days afterwards he was ordered to deliver the castle of Kaerfily to the bishop of Coventry and Lichfield.⁸ He was at Berwick, July 25th, 1327, when he witnessed a charter granted by the king.⁹ His son John was slain by Sir John de Norwich, knight, who was thereupon committed to the Marshalsea, but having produced evidence that the fatal blow was struck in self-defence he obtained a pardon, June 20th, 1334.¹⁰

Sir William de Felton (I.) was succeeded by his son Sir William de Felton (II.). He may be identified with the knight of that name who, together with Thomas de Heton and Robert de Homilton, took Mitford castle by a wily stratagem in 1317, and captured Gilbert de Middleton the rebel, who had fortified himself there.¹¹ For this service William de Felton was rewarded by a grant of 500 marks, to be paid yearly until the king should assign to him lands of equal value in lieu thereof.¹² In 1328, William de Felton took an acknowledgment from Sir Robert Delaval, knight, that he owed him 250 marks.¹³ He held West Matfen and Nafferton from the Crown under quit-rents which amounted to £25 per annum. Having allowed the payments to fall into arrears, and being pressed by the Exchequer for the sum of £76 16s., he obtained an order, September 12th, 1330, addressed to the sheriff of Northumberland, that the order¹ made on him should be superseded or respited until Michaelmas.² He had a pardon, January 23rd, 1330/1, for ten years of the rent of West Matfen with all arrears then due.³ On December 14th, 1332, he acknowledged that he owed John Darcy 'le cosyn' 200 marks, to be levied in default of payment on his lands in Northumberland.⁴ Two years later he made a similar acknowledgment that he owed to Ralph de Nevill, lord of Raby, 100 marks, to be levied in the same manner.⁵ In 1335 he transmitted to the Exchequer £200 for a fine levied on the county of Peebles.⁶ He obtained the office of sheriff of Roxburgh from George de Mowbray, husband of Isabella, countess of Mar, but that lady, who had divorced her husband, impeached the validity of the grant,⁷ and a new lease was granted by the king in 1336.⁸ His name heads the Edlingham subsidy roll for 1336.

William de Felton, like his father, was for some years constable of Roxburgh castle,⁹ and as such, on August 30th, 1337, he rendered an account of payment to the garrison for wages and for works at the castle, amounting to the large sum of £4,076 7s. 9d. After giving credit for various sums received, he showed that a balance of £415 1s. 10d. was still due to him.¹⁰ He seems to have been superseded, or to have resigned his office before March 30th, 1342, when he is styled late constable of Roxburgh castle.¹¹

The disputes with the Exchequer about the arrears of the quit-rents of West Matfen and Nafferton were settled in 1338, when these rents were granted to him in part satisfaction for the lands promised to him by Edward II. for taking Gilbert de Middleton.¹²

Sir William de Felton, either in himself or through one of his wives, was akin to Queen Philippa, who, June 30th, 1338, gave him a seven years' lease of the manor of Wark-on-Tyne, and of certain lands in her hands by reason of the minority of the heir of David de Strathbolgie,¹ earl of Athol, who was killed in Scotland, January 30th, 1336.² On April 12th, 1340, in consideration of his long and gratuitous service, he had a grant of the church of 'Abbodesleye,'³ forfeited by the abbot of Jedburgh, and had licence to grant the same to the master and scholars of Baliol College, Oxford, in aid of their revenues and augmentation of their numbers.⁴ The same month a writ de intendendo was issued to William Delaval in favour of William de Felton in respect to tenements in Edlingham, Lemington, and Newton, escheated by reason of the rebellion of Patric de Dunbar, earl of March.⁵ He was elected one of the knights of the shire for Northumberland in 1340, and was appointed sheriff of the county, March 8th, 1341.⁶ His compotus as sheriff was not ready at the proper time, and on March 26th, 1342, he was granted a respite, 'as he is constantly engaged in the castle of Roxburgh keeping the marches and the king's lands and demesnes there.'⁷

Pursuant to the statutes of Winchester and Northampton, William de Felton, Gilbert de Bourghdon, John de Fenwyk, and Robert Swan were appointed, May 1st, 1342, to keep the peace for the county of Northumberland, and to hear and determine trespasses committed from July 6th, 12 Edward III. (1338), by some in the county and by others coming by sea to divers parts of the coast, and afterwards returning to the sea again and making off.⁸ A commission was issued, January 2nd, 1342/3, to William de Felton,⁹ William Delaval, and William Heron, to make inquisitions in the county of Northumberland 'touching

In 1351, at the request of Edward III. and Queen Philippa, Pope Clement VI. granted to Duncan, son of William de Felton, knight, 'who on the wife's side is of kindred to the king,' a mandate to the bishop, the prior, and the convent of Durham, for the reservation of a benefice without cure of souls of the value of £40.³ Sir William de Felton was elected a knight of the shire for the three parliaments summoned in 1352, 1353 and 1354 respectively, and died about the year 1359, having made his will on the Monday before September 8th, 1358,⁴ in which he desired to be buried at Edlingham. There can be little doubt that his directions were carried out and that he was buried in or near the monumental recess at the east end of the south wall of the nave of Edlingham church, where there is still a shield⁵ with the arms (gules) two lions passant within a tressure flory counter flory (argent).

Sir William de Felton (III.) was stated to be of full age at the inquisition taken, February 24th, 1359/60, at Durham, after his father's death.⁶ He accompanied the duke of Lancaster's expedition to Spain, and charging down the hill against the enemy, with his spear at rest, he transixed a knight through the body, and being immediately surrounded

The heir of the entailed estate under the provision of the settlement made in 1315 was Sir William's half-brother, Sir John de Felton, then aged twenty-six years and upwards, but the lands held in fee simple devolved upon the heirs of the whole blood, viz., his two nephews, William, son of Robert de Hilton, and Robert (or Thomas), son of Robert de Swinburne, sons respectively of his two sisters Eleanor and Agnes.¹

Disputes arose between Sir John de Felton and the guardians of the sons of his half-sisters as to the estates which were comprised in the settlement of 1315, and there was a suit in Chancery. It was contended on behalf of the minors that West Matfen, Nafferton, Lorbottle, a fourth part of the manor of Edlingham, a moiety of the vill of Lemington, etc., had belonged to Sir William in fee simple. After many adjournments, the case came before the assizes held at Newcastle on the Saturday after Lammas-day (August 1st), 1372. John answered by his attorney as follows:

As regards the lands in Matfen West, Nafferton and Lorbottle, William de Felton, knight, the grandfather, granted them by charter to William, his son, and his heirs; with remainder to Constance, daughter of John de Felton, his son, and her heirs male; then to Alice, daughter of the said William de Felton, knight, and her heirs male; then to Eleanor, daughter of the said William de Felton, knight, and her heirs male; with ultimate remainder to the right heirs of the said William de Felton, knight. As regards the fourth part of the manor Edelyngeham, the moiety of the vill of Lemotton, 13s. 4d. rent in Lemotton, lands and the husbandland called Chesewykland in Newton, a messuage and a husbandland in Whytyngeham, of which it is supposed by the inquisition that William de Felton died seised in his demesne as of fee simple: John, by his attorney, in evidence of his right and for information of the jury, produced part of a fine levied on the quinzane of Trinity, 9 Edw. II. (1315), between William de Felton, his grandfather, plaintiff, and Robert de Felton, deforciant, of the manor of Elyneham (i.e., Edlingham) with appurtenances, which make the tenements aforesaid, by which fine Robert granted the premises to William for life, with remainder to William's heirs; on failure of such issue, remainders to Robert de la Vale and Alice, his wife, and her heirs male, John de Fenwyk and Ealoner, his wife, and her heirs male, with remainder to the right heirs of William. The jurors say that all the lands contained in the first inquisition, except £25 rent in Matfen West and Nafferton, are held in fee tail. As to the said rent in Matfen West and Nafferton, John produces Letters Patent dated July 29th, 1338, quitclaiming the said rent due to him and his heirs, in consideration of their good service in Scotland and in compensation for 400 marks, part of 500 marks yearly which Edward II. had granted to the said William for the capture of Gilbert de Middleton, the king's enemy and traitor, until such time as land or rent to that value should be given to him: the rent of £25 being formerly due to the king for lands held by him and others in fee farm at the rate of 4d. an acre and remised for a certain term not elapsed before the issue of the Letters Patent. The jurors say that John has no right in the said rent.¹

For his first wife Sir John de Felton married Joan, daughter of Sir William fitz William.² He was married for the second time to Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John de Fenwick, knight,³ on or before November 7th, 1385, when he paid ten marks to the king for licence to enfeoff John de Eston, vicar of Ponteland, and Richard de Edlyngham, chaplain, of the manor of West Matfen, and for the feoffees to re-enfeoff the said John de Felton, knight, and Elizabeth his wife in tail, with remainder to the heirs of him, the said John.⁴ He was one of Hotspur's knights who fought at Otterburn, August 19th, 1388,⁵ and a commissioner of array for Northumberland in the same year.⁶ He was appointed sheriff of Northumberland, November 7th, 1390,⁷ and was elected knight of the shire the same year. John de Felton died on Friday, 31st March, 1396, seised of the manor of Edlingham, 'where is a castle worth nothing by the year,' 200 acres of demesne land, ten acres of meadow, a water corn mill, three several pastures called Haynyng, Bysteale and Edeschawe, a slate quarry called Ruthle, seven husbandlands, eight cottages with lands and tenements in the Neweton and in Lematon, with a rent of 7s. 6d. in the vill of Bolton; worth beyond reprises, £18, according to the true value; held of Henry de Percy, earl of Northumberland, as of the barony of Benele, by the service of a sparrow sore hawk or 6d., at the Nativity of St. John the Baptist.⁸ His heir was his son John, born of his second marriage, in October, 1387. Sir John de Felton's widow, Elizabeth, re-married Henry Boynton, by whom she had issue a son, William, who, in the inquisition taken after her death, was found to be her heir, and upwards of twenty-two years of age. She died April 7th, 1422, when the third part of Edlingham, which she had enjoyed in dower, reverted to her first husband's grandson, John Hastings.¹

John de Felton, the last of his race, died on Wednesday, February 1st, 1402/3, under age, and in the ward of the king. He was seised of two parts of the manor of Edlingham, of the castle there, which was worth nothing beyond reprises, of 132 acres of land, 80 acres of meadow, two parts of Lematon-hall, and of a slate quarry called Roghle, two parts of seven husbandlands, and of eight cottages, two parts of a tenement in Newton, and lands in Lemington, and of 6s. 6d. rent in the vill of Bolton, etc. His heir was his half-sister Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John de Felton, knight, wife of Sir Edmund Hastings, knight.²

Although Sir Thomas de Felton, knight, seneschal of Aquitaine, is described by Froissart as brother of Sir William de Felton (III.),³ it is more probable that he was his uncle, for it is evident that he was the older man. He took part in the expedition into Spain in 1366. With Joan, his wife, he obtained from Pope Clement VI. at Avignon in September, 1363, at the request of Edward, prince of Wales and of Aquitaine, a licence to have a portable altar for the period of six years, which privilege was extended and made perpetual by Pope Urban V. three years later. In the first licence he is styled steward of the prince's household.⁴ On October 5th, 1367, he obtained from the king the castle, town, and lordship of Haverford for the term of his life,⁵ and he and his wife had a grant, January 7th, 1369/70, of Kirton in Lindsey, Lincolnshire.⁶ In 1380 he was captured by the French, who held him to ransom, towards the payment of which there was a grant from King Edward of 30,000 francs.⁷ He died before August 25th, 1381,⁸ for on that day the king appointed

EDLINGHAM CASTLE.

Edlingham castle is situated on low-lying ground to the west of the Edlingham burn, about two and a half miles south of its junction with the river Aln. The site was doubtless selected with the object of utilising the stream as a means of defence, of which further advantage could be taken by diverting the water into a ditch or moat on the north side.

Between the castle and the church, which lies about 200 yards to the south-west, the ground rises and the surface is uneven, indicating buried buildings.

Edlingham castle possesses an interest beyond that of the other towers which stud the country within easy distance of the town of Alnwick, both on account of the architectural details it exhibits, and of the abundant indications of the courtyard or barnkyn which yet remain.

The castle, although of diminutive dimensions, exhibits some of the arrangements of a defensive military structure, as may be seen by the general plan. It comprises a rectangular courtyard, with projections to the east and west, that to the east being the keep or tower with flanking walls connecting it with the north and south curtains. So placed, the tower, as was frequently the case, occupied a position on the exterior of the site, commanding the country and imparting strength at the point likely to be assailed.

Having regard to the rising ground to the south, and to the numerous indications of buried debris, it may reasonably be inferred that the projection on the west of the courtyard represents the gatehouse; whether or not this was the case, the re-entering angle, of which it forms one side, may have contained the gateway, opening into the courtyard. There are also indications of buildings at the north-east and south-east angles of the courtyard.

The keep is three storeys in height and is square on plan, with angle buttresses set diagonalwise, which are continued to the parapet level, and terminate in circular bartizans. The plan of each floor comprised a single chamber only; that on the ground level was vaulted, but is now inaccessible, being filled with fallen material. The main or principal floor is a very ornate room with a groined roof. The entrance, screened by a forebuilding, is on the west side, and adjoining it is a circular newel staircase, which communicated with each floor and the battlements. The whole of the masonry, both on the exterior and interior, is in ashlar courses of superior workmanship.

The forebuilding, which protected the entrance, was two stories in height, as can be seen by the holes in the keep walls wherein the joists and roof timbers have rested. On the principal floor-level it formed a chamber about twelve feet square, and on the south side was lighted by a window, one jamb of which still exists. The door opening between the forebuilding and the keep was an arched one, with double chamfered head and jambs, and was secured by a stout bar, the hole for which is in the south jamb; it opened into a short passage, four feet wide, with a ceiling formed of large flat stones, resting on a chamfered oversailing course on either side. The apartment to which the door gave access will compare favourably, in point of detail, with any chamber of any other tower in the county; it is twenty-two feet square, and has a groined ceiling, with chamfered diagonal and wall ribs, springing from carved brackets, with grotesque human heads and arms which clutch the moulded abaci. It measures, from the floor to the crown of the vault, twenty-two feet, and was lighted at the floor-level by two windows on the north side, and one, at least, on the east side; they have square jambs to the room, contracted towards the outside. The windows appear to have been of single lights, having chamfered and rebated jambs for shutters, with ogee heads enclosing trefoiled cusping. The lintel stones in the thickness of the wall are flat, but on the inside face are supported by large stones inclining to the centre in the form of struts. The fireplace is in the south wall; it is 7 feet 3 inches in width, and has a projecting hood over a lintel, now destroyed, formed of several stones 'joggle jointed' together, and is a unique example of such treatment.¹ The side jambs are moulded and corbelled out, and terminate below the lintel in oversailing brackets, on which are wrought finely sculptured heads. On either side of the fireplace is a square locker, rebated for a door. In the west wall are two pointed arched recesses; the lower courses of one of them are circular on plan, and no doubt form the upper portion of the shaft of the draw-well, the adjoining recess being intended for the water vessels. The sides of both recesses are notched midway in their height, possibly to receive the tackle necessary for drawing the water. There are holes for flooring joists at the springing-level of the vaulting, indicating that the upper portion of this fine apartment was used as a loft or chamber. There are also two small square-headed windows in both the north and south walls, and at the higher level in the north wall there is a portion of a hooded fireplace. The upper portion of vaulted apartments was frequently so used, and, as there is no door opening off the staircase at the higher level, the loft was apparently reached by a ladder.

Ascending the circular newel staircase by a small pointed doorway which opens off the forebuilding, we reach another door which either led into a chamber immediately over it, or on to an area covered with a pent roof or hoarding, and thence, probably, on to the parapet of the curtain wall. The door was secured by a bar on the inside; on the exterior, near to the west jamb of the door, is another bar hole. Small notches to receive the roof timbers are visible in the keep wall. Continuing to ascend the staircase, a large chamber, 24 feet square, is attained; its door opened inwards, and was secured by the usual bar. Near to the door is a fireplace with moulded jambs and carved brackets, from which springs an arched lintel supporting a stone hood. The only other feature remaining on this floor is a small square-headed window in the south wall with flat chamfered rere arches.

Only fragments of the lower portion of the roof battlements now exist; in them are no indications of machicolations. The staircase rises as a turret above the roof level, and, on the interior, is crowned by an 'umbrella-shaped' vault, formed by seven chamfered ribs springing from the centre newel. On the exterior, the walling between the north-west buttress and the staircase rises to a higher level, to screen the open stair leading to the top of the tower, which served as a look-out and beacon.

FIREPLACE IN EDLINGHAM CASTLE.

(NOW PARTLY DESTROYED.)

The basement is now entirely filled by the fallen stones of crumbling vaults and walls, and quite inaccessible. On the exterior there are no signs of windows, but it possessed a fireplace, the flue from which is visible at the back of the fireplace of the room above. There is also in the east wall (nearest the stream), a garde-robe shaft, and near to it, and discharging in the same direction, is a drain or water outlet.

At the north-east angle of the courtyard there are fragments of a two-storeyed building with a bold chamfered plinth course, with small loops or windows at each floor-level. The masonry is of good ashlar. The curtain wall extended from this building to the north-east angle of the keep, and enclosed the angles between the buildings. At the south-east angle of the courtyard are some fragments of masonry, shown on the general plan, part of which is rounded for a well or staircase on the interior. At the west end of the courtyard the walling is two storeys in height, and, like the tower, is of massive construction; it contains a shoulder-headed door or window jamb, in which is a small locker.

Elizabeth de Felton, wife of Sir Edmund Hastings of Rouseby, or Roxby, in the county of York, knight, succeeded to her brother's estates at Edlingham, Newtown, Lemington, Bolton, Thirston, Black-heddon, Nafferton, the Steel near Otterburn, and Buteland.¹ Her stepmother Elizabeth, who for her second husband had married Henry Boynton, held a third of the lands in dower until her death in 1422.² Edmund Hastings, who was of an old and widespread Yorkshire family,³ represented Northumberland as one of the knights of the shire in 1407, and was sheriff of the county in 1414 and 1418.⁴ Dame Elizabeth Hastings died before her stepmother,⁵ her husband surviving her for twenty-six years or more. By a charter dated at Rouseby, January 14th, 1444/5, Sir Edmund Hastings conveyed all his lands in the lordships, etc., of Edlingham, Newtown, Lemington, Roughley, Bolton, Thirston, Nafferton, etc., to his son William Hastings, John Lilburn of Shawdon, gent.; John Selby of Biddleston, gent.; Richard Fyngyll, vicar of Edlingham; and James Buke of Morpeth, gent., who in 1449 had a pardon for acquiring the same;¹ and these feoffees were seised of the said lands at the time of his death, December 9th, 1448.² His heir was his grandson Edmund Hastings, eldest son of Sir John Hastings, knight, deceased. He is stated in the inquisition taken on his grandfather's death to be of the age of twenty years³ and upwards, but that was not so, for he was born at Brancepeth on April 1st, 1431, and was baptised in the church there the same day, his godparents being Sir William Elmeden, knight, John Claxton and Alice Ogle.⁴

Sir Edmund Hastings died September 19th, 1487,⁵ and was succeeded by his son Roger Hastings, whose son Francis married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Pickering of Oswaldkirk, Yorkshire.⁶ He was residing in Pickering Lythe in 1488, when he was bound over in good behaviour, himself in £2,000, and Sir John Middleton of Belsay, knight, John Heron of Chipchase, Thomas Grey of Horton, and Thomas Haggerston of Haggerston, esquires, in 2,000 marks apiece.⁷ He may have been the same Sir Roger de Hastings who with other Englishmen attended at Glasgow cathedral, December 10th, 1502, to hear James IV. take the oath to observe the treaties of peace and marriage concluded by his ambassadors.⁸ He sold Boddington in Northamptonshire in 1510,⁹ in which year the fee-farm rent of Edlingham was granted by the Crown during pleasure to Sir Edward Radcliffe, knight of the body, and Roger Fenwick, squire of the same, lieutenants of the Middle Marches.¹⁰

The Hastings family had large estates in Durham as well as in Yorkshire, and perhaps on this account they gradually disposed of their lands in Northumberland, Nafferton being acquired by a cadet line of the Swinburne family. On February 12th, 1513/4, Francis Hastings, described as son and heir of Sir Roger Hastings, knight, granted to George Swinburne the manor and lordship of Edlingham, with all 'wods and woodfalls, hedge-rows,' etc., set and lying within the towns and fields of Edlingham, Newton, Rughlee, Lammaton, and Bolton, to hold without impeachment of waste, from Christmas, 1513, for 31 years, at a yearly rent of £23 3s.¹ Three months later, by a deed dated May 10th, 1514, Hastings let to Swinburne, who is described as constable of Prndhoe castle, the castle and demesnes of Edlingham for the term of seven years. 'If it fortune the said Francis Hastings to come and dwell there after the forsaid seven years be past, it shall be good and lefull to him, and then if he, the said Francis, come not, it (shall be) leful to the said George and his heirs or assigns to and pesseably to occupy the foresaid castle, etc., to th' end and terme of twenty-one yeres fully to be completed, paying yerely to the said Francis, etc., 40s. of lawfull mone of England, and to the kyng 20s., etc., provided always that the forsaid Francis shall beld, uphold and reparell the foresaid castle during the yeres aforsaid at his own proper costs and charges.'² Francis Hastings seems to have been in the hands of London money-lenders, for writs were sued out of Chancery against him by a certain Thomas Myrfin of London, skinner, and on January 20th, 1517/8, he alienated to Robert Dormer the manor of Kinthorp, with lands at Kinthorp, Pickering, 'Elaborn,' Evarston, Crompton and Alderston, all in Yorkshire, and the manor of Edlingham, with lands at Edlingham, etc.³ Dormer conveyed to George Swinburne, July 8th, 1519.⁴

George Swinburne, the purchaser of Edlingham, was a scion of a cadet line of the Swinburnes of West Swinburne, who, as has been already mentioned, previous to the acquisition of Edlingham, had acquired Naffer-ton from the Hastings family. At the time of the purchase of Edlingham, George Swinburne was constable of Prudhoe castle. It is probable that he died about 1530, in which year his son Roger gave a messuage in Hexham and a tenement in Bingfield to the prior of Hexham, that he might have masses said in Ovingham church for himself and for his ancestors.⁵ Roger Swinburne at his death was succeeded by his son Thomas, whose name heads the Muster Roll of 1538.

1592/3, January 5th. Sir John Forster writes to Burghley concerning Jesuits, etc. 'Information was made to me that certain seminaries were reset at Edlingham and other places, whereupon I sent my men with a commission to search the houses, and lay fire to them if any resistance was made in a disobedient and rebellious manner, which I presumed to do more than my authority served for the better accomplishment of Her Majesty's service. My servants searched Edlingham and other places, and found great likelihood of their being there, but there were such secret conveyances and close corners made in walls that unless they hungered them out they could do no good; nevertheless, I shall use my best endeavours for apprehension of these Jesuits and traitors who haunt divers places in our country, and especially Edlingham, Eslington, Lamendon, and Cartington. I hope it will be no offence to Her Majesty or the Council if I proceed further than my authority serves, to attach such pestiferous traitors and inciters of the people.' *Cal. S.P.D. Eliz.-Jas. 1598, 18th April. John Swinburne of Edlingham, in consideration of £200 paid by Roger Widdrington of Beaufront, sells to him a tenement in Bavington, then in the occupation of Mark Shafto. Rev. John Hodgson's Collection 'U,' 192.

1606, 21st June. Indenture between John Swinburne of Edlingham, esq., of the one part, Thomas Salvayne of Stapleton, co. York, and Ralph Carr of Holburne of the other part. The said John Swinburne being 'estated of the manors of Edlingham, the Newtown, Nafferton, the Huggle, with their appurtenances, and being desirous that the said manors should continue in the name and blood of the Swynbournes so long as it shall please Almighty God to graunt the same, and for better preferment of Thomas Swynborne, soune and heire of the said John in marriage, and for his better mayntenance in that honorable service wherein he is now placed, and for better raising of sufficient portions to Margaret Swynborne and Eleanor Swynborne, daughters of the said John,' etc., etc. A settlement of the estate on Thomas Swinburne in tail male, remainder to Margaret Swinburne, wife of William Swinburne, in tail male, remainder to the right heirs of the said Thomas. It is provided that Thomas Swinburne shall pay his mother her jointure; to his sisters £500 for their portion, and to permit his father to inhabit any of the mansion houses, and to make him such allowance as shall be appointed by two indifferent friends. Cartae Swinburne, vol. i, p. 79. 1617, 22nd October. Indenture between John Swinburne of Edlingham of the first part, and William Shafto of Bavington, esq., Thomas Fenwick of East Matfen, George Beadnell of Lemondon, and John Ogle of Bradforth, gents. John Swinburne, for the natural love and affection which he beareth to Thomas Swinburne, his son, conveys to the said Shafto and Fenwick the manors of Edlingham, Newtown, and the Huggle, the farm or freeholds of Hawkewell and the Fawnes, the manor of Hamsterley, and Lands at Medomsley, to hold to the said John Swinburne for life, and after his death to the use of the said Thomas Swinburne, his son, in tail male; remainder to William Swinburne of Capheaton for life, and then to his son John, begotten of the body of Margaret, his late wife, daughter of the said John; remainder to William Swinburne, second son of the said William and Margaret. Ibid. vol. i, p. 86. Six of John Swinburne's Edlingham tenants presented themselves at the muster held March 26th, 1580, by Sir John Forster, warden of the Middle Marches.¹ At the muster held at Abberwick Edge, November 24th, 1595, the Edlingham tenants who presented themselves were William Errington, spearman, mounted on a grey trotting gelding fifteen hands in height; Alexander Myers, spearman, on a grey trotting gelding of sixteen hands; and Robert Davison, spearman, on a black trotting horse of fifteen hands.² Mr. Swinburne of Edlingham filed a bill at the warden court in 1597 against 'the goodman of Gateshaw' for five score ewes and wethers carried off by him in a border raid.³

There was a suit at York in 1605 brought by John Swinburne against Robert Heselrigg of Swarland respecting Edlingham and Glantlees moor or common, 'now in varience between the sayde parties;' the court ordered that they should be 'used and enjoyed in such sorte as the same haith bene by the most parte of twenty yeres last past.'¹ At the same time Swinburne was involved in a family dispute with the widow of his brother-in-law, Thomas Collingwood of Eslington.² She was daughter of Sir Ralph Grey of Chillingham, knight, and had re-married Thomas Ogle of Bothal, gent. In the course of the dispute, John Swinburne, March 13th, 1606/7, made a declaration that he had never borrowed any money from the said Anne, wife of Thomas Ogle, as she alleged, 'for all other sumes which [I] the said John Swinburne, had of hir for buyinge of blacke cloath and spyces for the funeral of her late husband, Thomas Collingwood, I did cause it to be payed where they weare due.'³

In proceedings in the Court of Exchequer respecting Edlingham common, Lancelot Errington of Fourstones, gent., aged ninety-six, on October 2nd, 1611, deposed that he had known John Swinburne, the proprietor of Edlingham, since his birth about fifty years ago, and that he had known Edlingham manor and the moor or common for seventy years, and that

The bounds of Edlingham more are as follows:—first, the same is bounded, beginning towards the north, at one place called the foote of the Heyneing-burne, at or near the falling in of the said burne or brooke into another burne called Edlingham-burne, and so along from thence southward all along upwards the said Heyning-burne to the head of the said Heyning-burne, and from the head of the said Heyneing-burne towards the east unto one little round hill commonly called or known by the name of the Blaike-lawe, and from the said Blaike-lawe still leading towards the east unto another little hill called the Yare-lawe, and from the said Yaire-lawe somewhat towards the south and south-east unto a parcell of ground called or known by the name of Wylterye, alias Wickerye, crosse, and so from Wilterye crosse towards the north unto one rigg or parcel of ground called the Meare-rigg, and so from Meare-rigg still leading towards the west to a great hill called Mydding-hill, and from Midding-hill still towards the west unto a great crag or stone called the Catt-stone, and from the Catt-stone directly into and through a clowgh called the myll-stone clowgh unto another parcel of ground called the Lamb-crag, in which there is a hewen mortys or hole made, wrought in the firme cragstone, wherein there is put a long square stone (being an ancient meare stone and bounder), betwixt the said great more called Edlingham more and Long Framlington more, and so from Lamb-crag directly towards the west to a parcell of ground commonly called Grubbstruther, and so to a heap or currock⁴ of stones there, and so from the said currock or heap of stones from thence toward the north unto a parcel of ground called Spittell-lawe, and from Spittle-lawe still northwards to another parcel of land called the Gowkestone-lawe, and from Gowkestone-lawe still northward unto one burne or becke called Cowe-burne, being the outmarche between Thronton and Edlingham lordships, which said several particulars are the out bounders and marches of Edlingham more.

The examinee further deposed that about 70 years since Thomas Swynburne, esq., father of John Swynburne, being the examinee's master, coming to enter the said manor, lordships and commons and wastes belonging, being during his minority in the possession of his uncle Thomas Swynburne (called Long Thomas), the said Thomas Swynburne the uncle persuaded his nephew to call his tenants to ryde the bounds of the great common called Edlingham moor, which he by the said advice with divers his tenants of the oldest men and this examinat did ride, beginning at the said Heyneing-burne, from place to place as already declared; and shortly afterwards for 9 years this examinat was the bailiff of the manor of Edlingham and of the said commons, wastes, etc., during which time this examinat with the tenants yearly in May rode the bounds. . . . That Thomas Swynburne, his master, had one John Thompson for his pounder and keeper of the said great moor, whom he hath often known to have taken the chattells of others not tenants of Edlingham manor, having come within the bounds of the moor, and mainly the goods of the farmers and tenants of the Sheills, Glamtleyes and Snyphowse, whose goods oftenest came on the moor, and kept them in Edlingham poundfold until the owners paid package.

Robert Fenwicke of Lesbury, gent., aged 54, who for 30 years past had been steward of the manor, and Edward Manners of Jesmond, aged 70 years, deposed to the same effect.¹

In a list of viscountal rents for the county of Northumberland contained in the comptus of Sir Thomas Swinburne of Edlingham, knight, sheriff of the county, 1628 and 1629, it is stated that the vill of Edlingham pays 9s. 4d.²

It is not known for what services rendered to the Crown or at what time Thomas Swinburne received the honour of knighthood, but in the settlement dated June 21st, 1606, of which an abstract is given above, in which his father, John Swinburne, conveys (or leases) to him certain of his estates, it is set out that one of the objects was 'for his better mayntenance of that honourable service whereon he is now placed.' In an undated petition to the lord treasurer made about 1634, Sir Thomas complains of the very heavy charges to which he had been put in the execution of his office as high sheriff for two years together, and to the great loss he had sustained by the neglect of his officers, who would give him 'no securitie for their places,' he being 'a meere stranger in that countrie, havinge neither lands nor residence in that countrie, his father yet livinge, was inforced to hyer other men with meate, drinke and wages for levyinge the king's money.'³ The calendars of the prisoners confined in the castle at Newcastle in 1628 and 1629, during his shrievalty, and the indenture made with his predecessor and that with his successor have been printed in the first volume of Archæologia Aeliana.⁴

Sequestered as a delinquent, Sir Thomas Swinburne fled and found refuge in the wilds of Blanchland, where he died 'on Wednesday, the 29th of April, 1645, at about 6 o'clock, in the presence of Ladie Forster, Mrs. Elizabeth Fenwick, John Applebie, John Teasdaile, Thomas Massam and others.' On the previous Monday, by a nuncupative will, he had made Dame Elizabeth Forster his universal legatee.³

Apparently Sir Thomas's estates⁴ had in 1639 been passed over to John Swinburne⁵ of Black Heddon, eldest son of his sister Margaret,

⁴ Whereas it hath pleased some parson to enforme Sr John Swinburne that his father was not possessed of those lands which he purchased of Sr Thomas Swinburne, such information is not true. For John Swinburne of Hampsterley, esq., dyed in July, 1639. Immediately after his buryall Sr Thomas Swinburne gave possession of all that estate unto his nephew, John Swinburne of Capheaton, esq. Shortly after Cuthbert Hearon, esq., did challenge and sue John Swinburne for all the said estate; the whole matter was totally referred to Sr William Fenwick, knt., and unto now Sr Henry Widdrington, whoe with Cuthbert Hearon and John Swinburne, esqrs., mett all in Capheaton castle on Michaelmas-day, and there did att large discourse the business and did order and warde that the said John Swinburne, esq., should paie unto Cuthbert Hearon, esq., £500 which monie he had borrowed from Mr. Hearon when he did purchase the said estate, and it was alsoe awarded that John Swinburne, esq., should peaceably enjoy the said estate which soe he did dureing his life, the said John Swinburne, esq., being possessed of that estate before this arbitration, and then and after untill Febbreuary 1642 3 that he dyed.

The said John Swinburne, esq., did in anno domini 1639 employ John Ramsay to looke to and purchase (? preserve) his woods in Edlingham and Newtowne, and Mr. William Porter to looke to and preserve his wood in Hampsterley.

And for certane Sr Henry Widdrington will confirme all this, for in the absence of John Swinburne, esq., who remained after att London, now Sr Henry Widdrington did assist John Williamson in anie doubtfull matter. As alsoe, in December, 1662 (?), when the said John Swinburne, esq., his wife, Mrs. An, lodged in Newcastle, these before-named tenants of Hampsterley came to Newcastle and paid the rents unto Mrs. An Swinburne, now Mrs. Godfrey. Cartae Swinburne, vol. ii. p. 55. wife of William Swinburne of Capheaton, to whom they were limited in the settlements made in 1606 and 1617. This John Swinburne was murdered at Meldon, and died February 15th, 1642/3,¹ and his estates were subsequently sequestered either for his delinquency or that of his father, William Swinburne. According to a return made about 1650, Edlingham castle demesne was at that time let to Thomas Sothern at £36 per annum, Edlingham north demesne and Newtown to George Grieve at £60 per annum, Edlingham south demesne to George Craister at £8 per annum, and Edlingham corn mill and close to John Ramsey at £9 per annum.²

On July 12th, 1653, the Commissioners for Compounding Cases contracted with Colonel Robert Thorp, Walter Sankey, esq., and Gilbert Crouch, gent., for the sale of Nafferton and Edlingham, with 'all that capital messuage called Edlingham castle and a mill and lands there and all that messuage called the Newtown tower in Edlingham aforesaid.'³ William Swinburne died in September of the same year, but either he, or his representatives after his death, were able to come to terms with the purchasers and to ransom both Edlingham and Nafferton.⁴ Sir John Swinburne was rated at £160 per annum in 1663 for Edlingham and the Newtown; he was also proprietor of Edlingham mill, of which the assessment is not separately given in the Book of Rates.

As a Roman Catholic, John Swinburne of Capheaton, April 28th, 1725, registered his estate at Edlingham. Edlingham Newtown was at that time let to Thomas and Francis Collingwood and Robert Snowdon at £331 per annum, the castle farm was let in parcels to George Sanderson, who paid £50, and John Gibson, who paid £38 for one parcel and a similar sum for another, the water mill was let to James Dixon at £23, five messuages were rented by as many tenants at rents which amounted to £58 13s., a parcel of ground, called Bursley,⁵ was let to William Mills and others at £13 9s. 6d., and several cottages, the rents of which amounted to £4 17s. 6d.⁶

A few years later than the Birches-nook witchcraft case, mentioned in a former volume,¹ there was a similar case at Edlingham, the story of which is told at some length in one of the older histories of the county, where some of the depositions in the case are printed. John Mills, tenant, and apparently agent, to Sir John Swinburne at Edlingham castle, deposed, January 22nd, 1682/3, that 'somer gon a yeaere this informant being abroad at his landlord paying his rent and comeing home at night and come downe the street hard by the doore of . . . Margaret Stothard, and here came a flash of fire over before him, and, as he thought, went to her dore, soe not at all being afraid for the fire untill his horse tooke to a stand and would neither goe back nor forward, then he began to be afraid and his haire stood upward on his head, then he cryed, "O Lord, deliver me for thy mercy saike, and for thy owne name saike," after that the horse went forward and went home and the said informant continued in greate feare all that night, soe that he was forced to send for his brother and other neighbours to stay with him that night.' Jacob Mills of Edlingham castle deposed that Margaret Stothard had bewitched the child of Alexander Nickle of Lorbottle because she had been refused an alms: 'Next morneing before day the childe grew unwell, and continued all the day very ill, still crying out, "the woman that waved the white thing at you is above me pressing of me and licke to bricke my backe and press out my hart," and so the childe continued still cryeing out in that manner, untill next morning againe about cocke crow, and then dyed.' William Collingwood also deposed that the witch had 'sucked the hart' out of the child of one Jane Carr of Lemington, but had cured the child of its ailment which was 'taken of the childe and laid upon the calf' tied in a band in another little room. Such were the charges laid before the magistrates.²

The ancient manorial water corn mill has been disused for fifty years. The mill-race is greatly earthed up, but the shell of the mill house still remains, on a coigne of which there is cut in bold characters 'T.W., 1678.'³ The initials are said to be the handiwork of Tom Whittle, the Northumbrian poet.⁴ It may well have been so, for at that period the name of the miller at Edlingham was John Whittin or Whitton, who had a son baptised November 17th, 1663, by the name of Thomas. The parish registers contain very numerous entries of the names of Whittle, Whittin, Whitton and Whitham, then residing at Edlingham and Lemington. They may originally have been of a common stock, although both Whittle and Whitton occur as place names in neighbouring parishes.

EDLINGHAM NEWTOWN.

The Newtown of Edlingham, now represented by a homestead with a single inhabited house, is situated within the 700 feet contour line, at the higher part of the ridge on which the ancient village was built. It possesses an extensive prospect to the north and east over pasture and woodland, and to the south over moorlands; it is protected on the north by a small plantation or group of old ash and other forest trees. The rock which crops out at the homestead provides an ideal site for the tower of 'Newton juxta Edlingham,' which once stood here.

The earliest mention of the Newtown in Edlingham is in March, 1334/5, when Matilda, wife of Richard de Acton and daughter and co-heir of Richard de Emeldon, for her purparty of her father's lands, had assignment of lands here.¹ In the same year Newtown occurs in the enumeration of the knights' fees, forfeited by Earl Patric, granted to Sir Henry Percy; it was at that time held of the Beasley lordship by Sir William de Felton of Edlingham, knight.² It is mentioned in inquisitions taken in 1368,³ 1396,⁴ and 1403,⁵ after the death of various members of the family of Felton, but in the list of fortalices in 1415⁶ it is stated that the tower was at that time held by a certain John Barker, of whom nothing else is known, and it is probable that he was only an officer of Sir Edmund Hastings, knight, proprietor, in right of his wife, of Edlingham. From 1396 to 1420 Newton formed part of the jointure of Elizabeth, wife of Henry Boynton, widow of Sir John de Felton, knight.⁷

The tower of Edlingham Newtown and certain lands there subsequently came into the hands of the family of Manners. There was an award made at Newcastle, October 4th, 1531, in a dispute between John

The Manners family retained their lands here until after the middle of the sixteenth century, when by a deed dated January 4th, 1568/9, 'Edward Mayners, late of Newton,' gave his tower, capital messuage, gardens, lands, etc., at Newton, and his lands at Edlingham, of the yearly value of 46s. 8d., to Thomas Swinburne in exchange for lands in Milburn³ of the yearly value of 53s. 4d. Possession was given in the presence of Sir George Kinge, clerk, vicar of Edlingham, John Bellingham of Abberwick, gent., John Wilkinson, John Pigden and George Fram, all of Edlingham, yeomen.⁴ As has been already mentioned, Edward Manners, a man of the age of 70, and residing at Jesmond, gave evidence in 1611 respecting the bounder of Edlingham moor.

The farm at Newtown seems to have been in hand about 1615, for in an inventory of William Swinburne of Capheaton, taken December 8th, 1615, there are enumerated vij kyn, iij mart kyn—whereof iij of them is slane and the fourth is to slea—iij oxen, one quie and one cowe, also xiiij marts more—whereof two of them was slayn and one sould—all come from Newtown.⁵ The Scottish army under Leslie rested here for the night, Monday, August 24th, 1640, having marched that day from Branton field.⁶

EDLINGHAM CHURCH.

Edlingham was one of the vills given to the congregation of St. Cuthbert by Ceolwulf, before or at the time that he resigned the crown of Northumbria in 738,¹ and retired to Lindisfarne as a monk; and although Symeon of Durham does not say that he built a church there is much probability that he did so. A fragment of a sculptured memorial cross, which once no doubt stood in the cemetery, was discovered in 1901, near the spring in the glebe, about 500 yards distant from the present church. The ornamentation resembles that on cross shafts found at Hexham and elsewhere in the county, and it seems to be earlier than Edgar's grant, but that is a matter quite uncertain. It has been asserted that the church (if there were an earlier church) was replaced by a structure erected by bishop Egred, 831-847, but the Recapitulatio—the authority relied on—does not expressly state that the bishop built a church at Edlingham.²

CROSS SHAFT.

Towards the latter part of the eleventh century, probably soon after the conquest, the church of Edlingham, which is under the invocation of St. John the Baptist,³ was given to the monastery of St. Albans, through the daughter house of Tynemouth, by Gospatric, whose grant was confirmed by his son Edgar in a charter, to which a noble seal is still attached, remaining in the treasury at Durham.¹ This charter will appear in autotype with the seal. As has been already related in a former volume, the monastery at Tynemouth had been given by earl Waltheof to the congregation of St. Cuthbert, who were subsequently dispossessed by Robert de Mowbray, earl of Northumberland, who gave Tynemouth to the abbey of St. Albans. This transfer, although confirmed by William Rufus, was never acknowledged by the monks of Durham, who constantly asserted their right, until, by consent of both parties, the matter in dispute between the two houses was submitted to arbitrators appointed by pope Alexander III.²

By the award³ of Roger, bishop of Worcester, and John de Salisbury, treasurer of Exeter, an agreement was made at Warwick, November 12th, 1174, under which the prior and convent of Durham, in consideration of a grant by St. Albans of the churches of Edlingham and Bywell St. Peter, quit-claimed and renounced all right to the monastery at Tynemouth.⁴

In 1306 they were taxed at one mark in forty and paid 15s. and 3s. 4d. respectively.²

In the treasury at Durham there is preserved a bond, a document of the thirteenth century, by which John firmarius of Edlingham obliges himself to pay 30 marks to the sacrist of Durham.³

In the rolls of the sacrist of the monastery of Durham for the early part of the fourteenth century there are entries of sums received for tithes derived from lands in the parish of Edlingham. Sir William de Felton paid 70s. for Edlingham, and Walter Corbet 4s. for Learchild. John de Espley and Robert de Bolton paid £6 for Abberwick and Learchild. John de Unthank paid 6s. 8d. for Lemington. John Boyse and Simon Coco paid £4 for Edlingham and Newtown, William de Bednall, Henry, son of John, and Alexander Blakeberd paid 53s. 4d. for Lemington, and Mr. William 'de Alburnwyk' paid 66s. 8d. for Abberwick. Sir William de Felton and Simon Coco paid £4 for Edlingham, and William de Felton jun., and Simon Coco paid £5 for Lemington; Robert 'de Alburnwyk' paid 30s. for Abberwick; Sir Duncan the chaplain and J. Boyse paid 13s. 4d. for Learchild. Sir R(ober) de Esshendon, vicar of Edlingham, paid £5 for Edlingham, Newtown, Lemington, and Abberwick, and in the following year he paid 60s. for Edlingham and Newtown; William de Felton, junior, paid 40s. for Lemington.⁴

Between the years 1344 and 1346 the prior and convent as owners of the great tithes expended £8 10s. 4d. on Edlingham chancel.⁵

⁴ The description of Edlingham church was written by Mr. W. H. Knowles, F.S.A., and printed in the Transactions of the Durham and Northumberland Arch. and Arch. Soc., vol. v. p. 37, and the illustrations

The walls of the nave, chancel, and aisle have been very much disturbed and rebuilt, and it is difficult to assign with certainty the date of the several alterations.

The earliest portion of the existing fabric is no doubt the west wall of the nave, now enclosed in the tower, coloured black on the plan (fig. 2) and shown in the elevation (fig. 1). The features of this gable are quite consistent with pre-Conquest work, and may, with great probability, be attributed to that period. The doorway has a square lintel and semi-circular tympanum over it, and a bar hole in the south jamb to secure the door on the inside. Above the doorway is a narrow circular-headed window with splayed jambs on the interior, and in the gable is a small circular opening. The height of the gable is indicated by the weather-moulding which remains on the east side of the tower wall (fig. 1). The south-west angle of the nave in its lower courses contains some of the original quoins.

Of the Norman church, which comprised a nave, chancel, and south porch, the south and east walls of the nave and the porch remain, and may be attributed to the first half of the twelfth century. The chancel arch is formed, towards the nave, of two square orders, with a double chamfered label moulding. It springs from a double chamfered impost carried across the soffit and west side of the arch. The south doorway has a semi-circular arched head of two orders, the inner one chamfered and the outer having a roll moulding. The doorway is enclosed by a hood mould ornamented with a double billet. The inner order is continued to the ground as a chamfered jamb, and the outer order is supported by a nook shaft having a cushion capital and moulded base. The doorway is protected by a barrel-vaulted porch of the same date, the outer opening of which has square jambs, and a round-headed arch of which accompany it were made prior to the restoration which was carried out during the year 1901. The illustrations afford an interesting record and consequently have been reproduced unaltered. At the time of the restoration the nave floor was lowered to its original level as indicated on fig. 3. Many features in the nave and chancel were revealed and the window openings, previously occupied with ordinary sashes, were filled with oak tracery. The font has been removed from the centre to the north-west corner of the nave. During the operations a piscina was discovered in the south side of the chancel; it has a pointed head with a roll moulding continued down the jambs. The fireplace at the south-west angle of the chancel (see the plan) has been removed, and near it an arched recess, before then hidden, has been opened out. A shield and some fragments of grave covers were also found. The shield bears the arms—[gules] two lions passant within a double tressure [argent]: Felton. The grave covers include one with a sword and shears which now forms the threshold of the entrance door, a portion of another, enriched with the head of a floriated cross, and a second fragment with a part of a cross and the hilt of a sword.

a single square order. Both the vault and the arch spring from a double chamfered impost. On the exterior is a good splayed base course; a similar feature is also found at the south-east angle of the nave (fig. 2). The latter has been broken off and the arch of the porch has been altered in a way which is described later on.

The present chancel probably does not correspond in size with the original Norman chancel of the same period as the nave; it most likely was smaller. The chancel may consequently be regarded as the first alteration or addition, and is due to a time perhaps not much later than that of the nave, though it was certainly built after it, for the portion of the base course which remains at the south-east corner is overbuilt by the south chancel wall. In the chancel is a modern-pointed window, within the opening of a priest's door, the lower jamb stones of which can be seen below the window sill. On each side of the doorway the masonry has been rebuilt, and indicates the probable position of windows of an early date. At the east end is a modern one inserted in 1864.

The next alteration which occurred was the addition of the north aisle and the insertion of an arcade of four bays of a date just before the commencement of the thirteenth century, about 1190. The arches (fig. 3) have two orders, the inner one only being chamfered. They are supported on cylindrical shafts with moulded capitals which have a square abacus with scallops below, divided by nail-head ornament, and with bases enriched by nail-head in the hollow of the moulding set on a square chamfered plinth, as shown in the elevation (fig. 3). The east and west arches are supported on responds, half-columns on plan, with capitals and bases similar to those of the shafts. In the west wall of the aisle (fig. 1 at A) is a round-headed window, opening with widely splayed jambs internally, of which the lower portion has been cut away for the door into the modern vestry. It is doubtful whether the north wall of the aisle is contemporary; it appears, indeed, to have been entirely rebuilt. It contains a built-up doorway with chamfered jambs and pointed arch formed by two stones. The aisle roof continues the rake or slope (fig. 1) of the original nave roof, as was usual in early work. The tower, which is an addition to the west end of the church, has a good moulded base course (BB fig. 1), and may have been erected at the same time as the north aisle. If this was the case, either the superstructure was not continued at once or it soon after required rebuilding, the windows and the character of the masonry agree with work executed at the end of the thirteenth century. The tower is strongly built and was no doubt intended for defensive purposes. It is lighted on the ground floor on the south side by a small lancet slit rebated for a shutter on the outside, and placed some distance above the floor-level, and by six square-headed windows, with chamfered jambs, in the north, south, and west walls, above and below a chamfered offset course, five feet below the present eaves of the roof. The slated pyramidal roof is comparatively modern.

During the fourteenth century various modifications were introduced, including the breach in the south wall of the nave, reaching from floor to ceiling, and the erection on the inside of a segmental arched recess, seven feet long, intended probably for the effigy or monument of William de Felton, lord of Edlingham (who died in 1358),¹ having above it a window, the tracery of which has disappeared, the outer order and label moulding alone remaining. The introduction of these features accounts for the destruction of the exterior Norman plinth course. These additions must have added to the appearance of the church and were probably due to the owner of the lordship and castle.

There is a square-headed window opening, now built up, above the porch similar to those in the tower. The buttress at the north-east angle of the aisle is of perpendicular character, and the adjacent walls may be of the same date. The opening of the south doorway was curtailed in size, in the seventeenth century, by the insertion of a flat four-centred arch supported on chamfered jambs.

porch, the window on the south side of the chancel, and that at the east end of the aisle.

Below the chancel arch (fig. 2) is a stone wall five feet six inches high, with the rebated and chamfered jambs of a doorway in the middle. The work is too substantial for a screen base and appears to show that for some reason the chancel had at one time been shut off from the nave.

The font bowl is octagonal in shape and stands on two steps circular on plan. On one side of the bowl is the date 1701, which of course does not apply to the making of the font, but may indicate the date of the work done in the reparation of the outer porch arch, in which were then inserted a classical keystone, two mediaeval carved heads, one on each side of the keystone, and a stone, probably a niche originally intended for a lamp.

The seating (recently removed), the communion rails, and the pulpit were introduced in 1726, as probably were the sash windows in the nave on either side of the

The vestry was added at a still later time than 1726, as was also the fireplace in the chancel, an uncommon feature, but one affording, doubtless, considerable comfort to the occupants of the square pew in which it was enclosed.

THE NAVE IN 1900 (looking east).

In the churchyard is a portion of a two-light traceried four-centred window head rebated for wood shutters, and two large base stones, socketed for the shafts of crosses, probably memorial, and of prae-Conquest date.

The church possesses a modern bell, a silver cup and cover made by W. R. (or W. B.) and bearing date 1612, a silver paten made in Newcastle by A. B., with the inscription, 'Thank offering of the Rev. James Manisty, B.D., vicar of Edlingham, 1808,' and a pewter flagon inscribed 'Edlingham, 1738.'¹

The old vicarage house stood nearer the church and was replaced in 1840 by the present structure. On February 7th, 1879, it was the scene of a very extraordinary burglary, which gave rise to curious complications of law.²

For Edlingham and Newtown, 4s. 4d.; for Lemington and Hillhead, 4s. 6d.; for Learchild, 2s.; for Broompark, 8s.; and if any happen to be sold, the buyer is to pay the vicar 1s. for every 10s. worth he shall so buy; for Bolton, 10s.; for Wood-hall, 3s.; for Abberwick West Demesne, belonging to Mr. Justice Burrell, 2s. 7½d.; for Mr. Burrell's East Demesne of Abberwick, called the Moor Laws, 6d.; for Mr. Ralph Storey's part of Abberwick, formerly belonging to Mr. Edward Huntridge, 1s.

Houses and parcels of ground with right of common. The vicarage-house with garden, yard, and stable; three several cottage houses situate and standing below and east from the said vicarage-house and stable; Edlingham church yard; Bolton chapel yard; the Green Close, lying on the north and back of the said vicarage-house, stable, and cottages, bounding on the town gate and church lane, and as the hedge about the same leads; the parcel of ground within Noreys Close, as the boulder stones now standing show the same; three parcels of ground in the Newtown meadows, called the higher, middle, and lower, as the boulder stones now standing show the same; the parcel of ground called Great Twinseys, lying south of the Little Twinseys.

One full fifth part of the south demesne of Edlingham, aforesaid, did of right belong to the said vicaridge, but the late Sr Jno. Swinburne refusing to allow thereof the said late vicar, Ralph Carr, commenced a suit and recovered the same in or about the years 1663 or 1664, and after it was so recovered the said late vicar and the late Sr John Swinburne did agree to refer the matter then in difference to Ralph Clavering, late of Callowle, in the said county, esq., and Thomas Burrell, late of Broompark, in the the said county, gent., now both deceased. As also the eighth stint throughout the whole north demesne, which did belong to the said vicaridge, and the said Sr John Swinburne and vicar did agree that the said two arbitrators should sett of a piece of ground for the said vicar in lieu of the said eighth stint. And the said arbitrators did sett of a piece in lieu thereof, which goes by the name of the Hutt, and the late vicar, Ralph Carr, enjoyed the same during his life, and the present vicar, Robert Carr, and his tennants have since enjoyed the same, in lieu of the said eighth stint, through the said north demesne. And the said arbitrators also ordered the said late Sr Jno. Swinburne, should pay or cause to be paid unto the said late vicar and his successors, yearly and every year three pounds, six shillings, and eight pence, in lieu of the said fifth part of the said south demesne, the same to be paid half-yearly, at Whitsuntide and Martinmas, which said sum of £3 6s. 8d. was after received by the said late vicar during his life and since his decease by the present vicar, Robert Carr and his tennants, as the same became half-yearly due, but there was no award made by the said arbitrators in writing, nor confirmed by the bishop. Also the said late vicar and his tennants enjoyed the liberty of peat turf, flagg, and hather or ling, and right of depasturing for all manner of cattle, on through and over all moors and commons belonging to Edlingham and Newtown, aforesaid; during his life and ever since his decease the present vicar and his tennants have held and enjoyed the same rights and privileges in the said moors and commons.

The Clerk's Dues. For Edlingham south demesne, 1s. yearly; Thornwell bank there, 9d.; Noreys farm there, 6d.; How's part of the Castle farm there, 6d.; every other tenant of the Castle

1726, 30th May. Dr. Eden, the Official, made the following orders to the churchwardens:— My injunction to you is that the chancel be whitened and flagged. That rails be made before the communion table. That the hole in the chancell wall be closed up. Lett there be a new south door to the chancell. You are required to provide a new flagon, a new chalice, an altar cloath, and a cover for the font, to remove the pulpit, or rather make a new one, with a convenient reading desk and seat for the clerk. Lett there be new seats erected in a regular uniform manner for the parishioners. The body of the church must be flagged, the roof and porch repaired, and the belfrey cleaned. The old wall of the church yard must be repaired.¹

1733. Paid John Lambert for laying the causeway from the vicarage house to the church, £1 4s. 7½d.¹

1738. The church was new leaded at the cost of £52 1s. 2d.; the charges for timber and carpenters' work amounted to £18 14s. 3d.¹ etc., etc.

1738, November 21st. Agreed, etc., that thirteen times 'the ancient rent' be collected towards the repairs of the church, in all £67 os. 10d.¹

1761, March 24th. It is agreed that whoever of the Four and Twenty that does not appear on Easter Tuesday on every year to attend the parish business, shall forfeit the sum of one shilling, without giving a just and lawfull reason for his non-attendance.¹

1763, July 9th. Samuel Dickens, the Official, gave the following injunctions to the churchwardens and vestry. That the cracked bell in the church of Edlingham be repaired, and all other things put in order about the church which require it. That all defects about the chancel, either in the roof, walls, or pavement, be sufficiently repaired. That the churchyard wall be well taken care of.¹

1778. Ordered that the overseers provide two badges for each pauper now upon ye books as relievable, according to the model left in ye vestrie.¹

1781. Ordered that the north isle of the church be immediately repaired, and the pitch of the rooffe raised as shall be thought necessary, also that the floor of the church be raised twenty inches higher, with the pulpit and seats raised in proportion, also such sum of money as shall be found necessary for defraying the expense thereof be collected by the . . . churchwardens throughout ye whole parish, according to the ancient mode of collecting cesses for the repairs of the church.¹

1793, 9th November. Ordered that two whole rents and a half be collected towards the relief of the militia-men's wives and families, and the hiring of substitutes.¹

1802. Ordered that the window next to the pulpit should undergo such alteration as shall be thought most convenient, as likewise that the window next to the bell-house should undergo a similar alteration.¹

With the exception of the church, vicarage, glebe, etc., and the lands occupied by the railway company (17 acres), the whole of the township of Edlingham belongs to Sir John Swinburne, bart., who, for the manor of Edlingham,² pays a quit-rent to the duke of Northumberland as lord of the barony of Beanley.

² Up to last century Sir John Swinburne's predecessors in title continued to hold court-leet and court-baron, and, as lords of the manor, received deadand and other manorial dues.

1817, 18th September. 'Received of Mr. Henry Nicholson of Wandy's Stead farm, parish of Edlingham, and county of Northumberland, the sum of two shillings, being a deadand for cart and horses by the coroner's inquest, and due to Sir John E. Swinburne, bart., as lord of the manor of Edlingham. (Signed) Francis Snowball, bailiff of the manor. Sir John Swinburne's papers.

LEMINGTON TOWNSHIP.

The township of Lemington, which comprises 2,042 acres, lies to the north of the township of Edlingham, with an elevation of 257 feet over sea-level, at Battle-bridge, on its northern boundary, and rising to a height of 828 feet on the confines of Alnwick moor. In 1901 it had a population of 57.¹ It contains the homesteads of Battle-bridge, the Branch, Broomwood, Hill-head, Overthwarts and Lemington, with Lemington mill, now disused,² and Lemington hall.

The latter stands on a terrace about 300 feet above sea-level, looking westward over the beautiful vale of Whittingham, and was, in its present form, erected in the first half of the eighteenth century,³ but contains a medieval tower. The house has not been occupied for about forty years, and, with its extensive gardens, has been allowed to go to ruin.

In draining the sloping ground near Lemington hall, called 'the pillar planting,'⁴ some years ago, a number of pits lined with rough boulder flags were found. In some cases the flag stones which covered them were broken and the holes were partly filled with earth; they had no bottom stones, and there were no fragments of pottery in any of them. There are numerous ancient cultivation terraces on the west side of the hall,⁵ and massive limbs of oak trees were dug out on Overthwarts farm when it was drained.⁶

A member of the lordship of Gospatric,⁷ Lemington was granted by one of the lords of that house to Edward, son of Gospatric, brother of Dolphin,⁸ to hold in drengage.⁹ His successors adopted and were known by the territorial designation derived from their estate. The name of Siward de Lemetun appears on the Pipe Roll as early as 1158,¹⁰ and in 1191 Adam de Lemeston rendered account of three marks, one of which he paid, and still owed two marks,¹¹ which he paid into the treasury in the following year and received his discharge.¹ William de Lemoketon was defendant in 1229 and 1230, in a suit brought by the master of Bolton, respecting tenements in Bolton.² In the amercements made by four justices in 1231, William de Lemoketon owed 10s. for a disseisin,³ which sum had been discharged in or before 1233, when the sheriff rendered account of 10s. received of William de Lemoketon.⁴ In the same year the vill of Lemoketon rendered account of two marks for a default; it paid one mark into the treasury and owed one mark.⁵

In an inquisition taken under a writ dated April 11th, 1247, to inquire what lands the Earl Patric holds and ought to hold of the king in sergeanty, it is stated that Lemonton had been granted by Quespatrick, ancestor (atavus) of the said Earl Patric, to Edward, and that John, son of Waldeve, lately deceased, had changed the drengage⁶ tenure into free service; Adam de Lemonton was the owner at the time of the inquisition.⁷ In 1253 the vill of Lemecton owed 3s., and the vills of Learchild, Abberwick and Edlingham proportionate sums for hogs in the forests.⁸

There was a suit at the Northumberland assizes in 1256, respecting a toft and twenty acres of land at Lemmecton, in which Amabillia de Lemmocton, paternal aunt of Cristiana, daughter of Emma, Margaret, daughter of the same, and John, son of Cristiana, were plaintiffs, and Margaret, daughter of Adam de Lemmecton, the defendant in possession. The defendant pleaded that she was not bound to answer, seeing that the plaintiffs Margaret and Cristiana had a sister Amabillia who was not party to the suit. An agreement was come to, but its terms are not entered in the record.⁹

At the same assizes there was a case respecting the death of Gilbert Spinck, Adam de Camhus's man, who was found slain on Lemaeton moor by Borard, son of Edmund. Borard, having given due notice of his discovery; was acquitted of all suspicion of having been the homicide, but the vill of Lemaeton was fined for not having appeared fully at the inquisition;¹ and at the assizes in 1279 the vills of Lemington, Edlingham, Thrunton and Abberwick, were fined for having falsely appraised at 2s. 6d. a mill wheel, apparently at Lemington, which was a deodand, having been the means whereby Richard, son of Alexander de Lemonchton, had been crushed to death.²

In an inquisition taken at Whittingham, January 3rd, 1289/90, after the death of Patric de Dunbar, it was found by the jury that he held no lands in his demesne as of fee, but that he died seised of various rents together with Edlingham, Lemington, etc., which William de Edlingham, held by cornage.³

Sir William de Felton, who died in Spain on Monday, March 30th, 1367, was seised in his demesne as of fee simple of a moiety of the vill of Lemotum; there were forty acres of demesne land in the hands of sundry tenants at will, who paid 20s. yearly for the same; five acres of meadow worth 5s. a year, seven husbandlands which paid 48s.; the herbage of a waste husbandland was worth 4s. a year, and six cottages paid 12s. All were held by tenants at the will of the lord. The other moiety of the vill was held of him by the service of 13s. 4d.⁴

Sir John de Felton, knight, who died on Friday, March 31st, 1396, was seised of lands and tenements in Lematon as well as in Edlingham, and also of a place (placca) called Lematon hall, held of the prior of St. John of Jerusalem, paying by the year 16d., and worth yearly beyond reprises 16s. according to the true value;⁵ and the last Sir John de Felton who died on Wednesday, February 1st, 1402/3, was seised of two parts of Lematon hall, the other being held in dower by his father's widow, but it was not known to the jury of whom the tenements at Lemington were held.⁶ His stepmother, who had remarried Henry Boynton, survived until April 7th, 1422, holding as part of her dower from her first husband a third part of eight husbandlands and forty acres of land in Lemotum, each husbandland being worth 12d. yearly and each acre 1d., and also of a third part of six cottages at the same place, each of which was worth 6d. yearly.⁷

Reade's and one of Mr. Beadnell's [men], who, meeting one of the poor men in his shirt naked, running there for aid, told him to complain or they would find means to let your lordship know.'¹ Two years later Roger Conyers is described as 'a gentleman of known good service who lay in the way' towards Scotland,² but soon afterwards his name is coupled with those of Francis Ratcliffe and Thomas Swinburne as recusants whom it had been intended to summon to Newcastle, but they had left the March thinking that 'by lurking till the commissioner is past to be no further troubled.'³

George Beadnell of Lemedon, esq., and Thomas Beadnell of the same place, gent., were brought before quarter sessions at Morpeth, January 16th, 1627/8, on a charge of having murdered Lewis Hedley, yeoman, and after having been confined in Newcastle gaol until August 12th, 1628, were tried at the assizes.⁴ Robert Beednell, George Beednell, jun., and Elizabeth Beednell were in gaol at the same time.⁵

The names of George Beadnell of Lemington, esq., and of George Beadnell, gent., his son and heir, appear in the list of freeholders of 1628,⁶ and in the list of viscountal rents drawn up in that year it is stated that the vill of Lemington pays 9s. 6d.⁷ In 1629 George Beadnell was a prisoner for debt at Newcastle, on the suit of Lewis Widdrington for £500.⁸ On July 30th, 1630, George Beadnell, Elizabeth, his wife, and Robert Beadnell, his son, conveyed the manor or village of Lameton, otherwise Lamedon, new demesnes with the half of Wheatley low field, the eatage and half-stint of a parcel of ground in the west wood and of Bolton south wood and of the moiety of fourteen messuages in Lamedon to Sir Thomas Widdrington, knight, and John Radcliffe to secure £1,800 and interest. The mortgagees transferred the mortgage to Sir John Clavering, bart., who, by deed dated June 7th, 1636, conveyed the security to Sir Francis Brandling, knight, and Sir Nicholas Tempest, knight, of Flatworth, near North Shields, as trustees for George Wray,⁹ younger son of Sir

William Wray of St. Nicholas, York, and the husband of Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Brandling, of Felling. George Wray in the civil wars espoused the king's side and was sequestered for delinquency. On July 3rd, 1651, Sir Nicholas Tempest petitioned the Committee for Compounding Cases that the county committee of Northumberland might be ordered not to hinder him from receiving the rents of the manor of Lemington, half the rents of 'Wheatley Lawfield,' the catage in the west wood, Bolton southwood, and of several tenements in Bolton and Lemington which were vested in him as surviving trustee by the conveyance of June 7th, 1636. Before this George Beadnell had petitioned the committee to be allowed to redeem the mortgaged estate which had come into the hands of George Wray and his trustees as mortgagees in possession. In a counter petition, Wray alleged that it was more than twenty years since Beadnell had mortgaged, and that the right of redemption was extinguished; the committee, however, decided in Beadnell's favour, and subject to the repayment of £1,850 resolved that the lands should be reconveyed to him by deed of bargain and sale. Meanwhile, Elizabeth Wray, George Wray's wife, who was residing at Lemington, complained to the committee, August, 1652, that she had 'scarce a good room in the manor house of her husband's sequestered estate to live in, and that Cuthbert Thomson, living in the part of the house through which she must leave her room, is very troublesome to his neighbours, and his wife is a brawler and scold; she begs his dismissal, as the tenants threaten to pull down the house if he is continued tenant.' About the same time Robert Kipling petitioned the committee that he took Lemington demesne from the county commissioners. He stated that he had given timely notice, at the request of the other tenants, and also of Elizabeth, wife of George Wray, to Cuthbert Thomson to remove, he being a very troublesome neighbour, and having destroyed the wood, 'being encouraged thereto by George Beadnell for whom he keeps the mansion house.' The tenants complained in similar terms, alleging that Turner 'tresspasses on their corn and breaks the pinfold.' Mrs. Wray refused to yield possession, and on Beadnell's solicitation a second order was issued, January 10th, 1653/4, to the county committee to see that he was put into possession and paid the half year's rent.¹

Durham, esq., and Thomas Fiddell of Ravenworth castle, gent., of the second part, and William Reed of Newcastle, gent., of the third part, reciting that a marriage was already solemnized between the said George Beadnell and Katherine, his wife, in consideration of which marriage Beadnell conveys to Clavering and Fiddell his manor and village of Lemyndon, alias Lameton, alias Lamedon, together with a full moiety of Wheatley Lowfield, and the cottage and hall-sit of a parcel of ground in the west wood of Bolton-outh-wood; also the said Beadnell's moiety of land and tenements called Alwicke-way, in or near Lemyndon, and all other the land in Lemyndon, Bolton, and Alwicke-way which he, the said George Beadnell, purchased from George Beadnell his father, and from Robert Beadnell, son and heir of George Beadnell, the father; also the lamhold and tithes of Wooden which he, the said George Beadnell, purchased from Henry Thompson, sheriff of Newcastle, son and heir of Thomas Thompson, late of Wooden, gent., and of Constance, widow of the said Thomas Thompson; also the tenement in Ovington which he, the said George Beadnell, had purchased from George Onely of Stella, black smith, Clavering and Fiddell to hold to the said George Beadnell for life, and then to the sole use of the said Katherine and her heirs for ever. From the original deed which, in 1895, was in the custody of Mr. Maberley Phillips.

1683, 24th March. Will of Robert Beadnell of Lemondou, gent. 'To my sister, Margaret Selby, for her life, half my corn tithes of High Sheels, with the full corn tithes of Low Sheels, and the corn tithes of Swinley; remainder to my nephew, George Beadnell. Durham Probate Registry. 'George Beadnell, the nephew, was son of a natural son of George Beadnell, the testator's father; he died circa 1715, seized of Shielddykes tithes, and left a brother, Robert Beadnell, surviving him; the latter made a deposition, 5th October, 1730. Shielddykes Tithe Papers.'

1683, 21st June. Will of George Beadnell of Newcastle-on-Tyne, merchant. 'I have several years ago preferred my daughter Mathia in marriage to Francis Naylor, and have given her a portion of considerable value, which is all I do intend her or her husband; I give to my dear beloved [wife], Katherine Beadnell all my estate whatsoever, as hereafter mentioned, viz.: (1) the corn tithes of Lemyndon, alias Lameton, alias Lamedon, which I hold of the dean and chapter of Durham; (2) my messuage or lamhold in Wooden; (3) my tithes in Wooden; (4) my messuage or lamhold in Ovington; (5) my messuage or mansion house in Black Dean, in Wardell, co. Durham; (6) my sixth share of the colliery seams of coal at Crawcrook and Kepier, co. Durham; (7) my messuages and lands in Lincolnshire; (8) my messuages and lands in Hampshire; (9) my coal colliery in the parish of Whickham. Residue to said wife, she executrix. Proved 1691. Ibid.

1685, 14th July. Will of Thomas Beadnell of Newcastle-on-Tyne, gent. 'I give to my grandchild, Abigail Wilkinson, £50, and also my longest silver tankard; to my grandchild, Robert Wilkinson, £50 when he attains 21, and I also give to the said Robert Wilkinson other £50 which his father, and my son-in-law, is owing me, and which I paid for him being bound with him—to Thomas Newton of Eachwick; to my grandson, William Wilkinson, £50 when he attains 21; to my son-in-law, William Ward (husband of my daughter Rebecca), and Robert Wilkinson, the sum of £400 due to me from John Fulthorpe upon a judgment or warrant of attorney entered against him and his estate in some of His Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster, in or about the year 1681; to my sister, Margaret Selby, £5; to Mary Sotheran, wife of Richard Sotheran of Gate-head, £5; to my maid servant, Isable Cuthbert, 60s.; residue to my son-in-law, William Ward, he executor. Proved 1685. Ibid.

1701, 4th November. Administration of the personal estate of Thomas Beadnell of Fenham, chapelry of All Saints', Newcastle, gent., granted to Mary Beadnell, the widow. Ibid.

1710/1, 14th March. Administration of the personal estate of Mary Beadnell of Fenham, widow, granted to George Beadnell of the same place, the son. Ibid.

'The last of this family I have heard of was many years house-keeper to Ralph Wildrington of Cheeseburn grange. She married an old gentleman who was heir male and representative of the old family of Selby of Selby, co. York. He had been a shipowner and had some remains of the family property which he sold, and purchased an annuity for his own and his said wife's lives. After his death his widow sold Sir George Selby's vault in St. Nicholas' to Edward Collingwood for £20.' Ralph Spearman's Notes.

Mr. George Beadnell was rated for Leamonden in 1663 at £250 per annum,¹ but was dead before June 20th, 1674, when the name of Robert Beednell of Lemington, gent., appears in a list of Northumbrian recusants.² The latter was apparently the last representative of his family who died in possession of Lemington, and the Edlingham register of burials, March 27th, 1683, records the burial of Mr. Robert Beadnell of Lemington.

From the Beadnells Lemington passed either by foreclosure or purchase into the possession of Sir James Clavering of Newcastle, bart., who died in 1707. He left an only daughter, eventually his heiress, Elizabeth, who carried it in marriage to Nicholas Fenwick of Newcastle, and it is comprised in their marriage settlement, dated May 9th, 1716. Nicholas Fenwick resided in the roomy house in Pilgrim Street, now the Liberal Club, and was mayor of Newcastle in 1720, 1726, 1736, and 1747. He also represented the borough in the parliament of 1727, 1733 and 1740. He seems to have added the mansion¹ to the old tower of the Beadnells at Lemington, and laid out the adjoining walled gardens.²

(k) Mr. W. H. Pawson's Lemington muniments.

Lemington with Low Learchild was advertised for sale in 1825,¹ by order of the trustees of Nicholas Fenwick, deceased,² and was purchased by Mr. William Pawson of Shawdon, to whose great-grandson, Mr. W. H. Pawson, these estates now belong.

LEMINGTON TOWER.

Unlike that of Edlingham castle, the site of Lemington is an elevated one, and Lemington hall in which the tower is now incorporated is a very prominent object from the road, between Alnwick and Edlingham. It is one and a half miles north of the latter place, and about four west of the former. The hall, now in ruins, was erected by Nicholas Fenwick before the year 1752. It is a plain house, with unobtrusive detail of simple eighteenth century character, symmetrically arranged with a central door in the south front, and with windows enclosed by moulded architraves and plain and pedimented cornices.

¹ To be sold by Mr. Robins at Garraway's Coffee-house, Change Alley, Cornhill, on April 14th, 1825, by order of the trustees of the will of the late Nicholas Fenwick, esq., the manor or reputed manor of Lemington, with mansion house, garden, and land, 253 ac.; the Branch farm, 145 ac.; Battle Bridge farm, 324 ac.; Mill and farm, 50 ac.; Overthwarts, 247 ac.; Hill head, 386 ac.; Moor, etc., 452 ac.—total, 1,860 ac., together with Low Learchild, 199 ac. Conditions of Sale, Rev. John Hodgson's Collection.

² Nicholas Fenwick, described as 'late of Lemington but then of Teignmouth, co. Devon,' conveyed, May 31st, 1820, to William Burrell, of Broome-park, Lemington Branch and 211 acres of land lying on the north and east sides of the turnpike road from Alnwick to Whittingham. Mr. W. H. Pawson's deeds.

The tower occupies the north-east portion of the hall. The masonry on its north side remains substantially untouched; but that on the east and part of the south side is encased in ashlar with mock windows to harmonize with the eighteenth century work; whilst the rest has been plastered over, being now interior walls. The retention of the original tower, in its adaptation to the design of the modern structure necessitates a corresponding projection on the opposite side of the central portion of the house.

Erected in the latter half of the fourteenth century, the tower commands the valley of the Edlingham burn, and was probably so placed to enable the owner to combine with the lord of Edlingham for their mutual protection. The plan is in the shape of the letter L, and the dimensions on the exterior about fifty-three feet from east to west by thirty-five feet at the west, and an additional thirteen feet at the east end. In point of size it slightly exceeds Chipchase and Cocklaw towers, measuring, respectively, fifty-one feet six inches by thirty-four feet, and fifty feet six inches by thirty-four feet eight inches.¹

The entrance, staircase and some small apartments three storeys in height occupy the projection on the south side, but the main block is only two storeys in height, the lower containing a high vaulted chamber, the upper being much altered. The tower, as was the invariable custom, once no doubt possessed a third storey, but it was probably removed in the eighteenth century. There are, however, no indications of parapets or battlements to throw light on this point.

FIREPLACE IN LEMINGTON TOWER.

The entrance door has a flat-pointed head. It is in the projection on the south side of the tower and opens into a small vaulted vestibule. On the left is a newel staircase, on the right a small apartment, and opposite to it a built-up door. This had opened on to the vaulted basement, an apartment forty-three feet in length by seventeen feet six inches in width, lighted by a single loop at the west end.

The door on the right of the entrance has a flat arched head in one stone; it leads into a small vaulted room, twelve feet by six feet six inches, lighted by two small loops, one in the east and one in the south wall, which was doubtless used as a guard chamber. The door on the left of the vestibule has a flat-pointed arched head and opens into a newel staircase communicating with the various apartments and the battlements. Ascending some half-dozen steps an irregularly shaped room is reached. This is formed in the thickness of the south wall, and lighted by a small window set in the angle of the apartment. Above the guard room, and entered from the staircase, is a room eleven feet by ten feet, lighted on the south side, and containing a good hooded fireplace supported by moulded corbels. Through this apartment opens a garde-robe in the north-east corner.

The upper floor, now roofless, appears as one large room; it has been altered on more than one occasion. The large square-headed fireplace with moulded corbel, in the middle of the north wall, and a few fragments of roof timbers are of later date than the fourteenth century work, and suggest possible improvements previous to the time when it was combined with the eighteenth century mansion, and was made accessible from the grand staircase near the west end. At this time new windows were inserted, and possibly one or more floors were removed and the apartment increased in height. One of the ancient features remaining is the fireplace in the north wall, with an arched head on corbels. Near to it is a square locker or drain. Within and without are traces of several windows the positions of which will be found indicated on the plan. In the north-west angle is a vacant space, probably a garde-robe, and near to it in the north wall a straight joint, no doubt the jamb of a doorway. At the west end of the south wall a small loop, visible on the exterior, suggests a mural chamber at this point. At the west end of both north and south walls shoulder-headed openings, and on the south wall a hollow moulding, forming a cornice at the ceiling level, can be traced. On account of the various alterations it is useless to attempt defining conclusively what these features really indicate. In the entrance projection, and a little higher than the level of the principal floor, is a small room of similar dimensions to those below, with a small window in the south and a fireplace in the east wall.

LEARCHILD TOWNSHIP.

The township of Learchild lies between the township of Lemington and that of Thrumton in the parish of Whittingham, in a sheltered and secluded situation. It is watered by the Coe-burn and traversed by the Morpeth and Wooler post road. It comprises 473 acres, divided into two farms of High and Low Learchild and there is a wayside alehouse, formerly called the 'Buston Arms' and now the 'Ravensworth Arms.' In 1901 it had a population of 22.¹

The heaps of turf and stone near the homestead of Low Learchild indicate that it was once a more considerable place. In the surrounding green are remains of old earthen enclosures for sheep and cattle.² As has been already mentioned,³ the foundation of the eastern branch of Watling Street is still visible near Low Learchild.⁴

When Gospatric's daughter Juliana was given in marriage by permission of Henry I. to Roger de Merlay, the founder (1138) of Newminster, her father granted, and the king confirmed to her,⁵ the extensive manors of Stanton, Horsley, Witton, Ritton, and a certain

'vill beyond the moors.'¹ In a charter of confirmation subsequently granted by her brother Edgar, son of Gospatric, this vill is called Leverchild.² This marriage cannot have taken place much later than 1100.

Of the estates so granted to Ralph and Juliana de Merlay, Ritton was given to the abbot and convent of Newminster,³ while Stanton, Learchild,⁴ Witton, Horsley, and Windgates remained in the possession of their lineal descendants for several generations.

Although not mentioned in the deed by which Roger de Merlay III. gave common of pasture and other privileges at Stanton to Sir Walter Corbet and Joan his wife,⁵ there can be little doubt that Learchild was granted to them about the same time, for in 1247 it is stated that Leuerilchild and Stanton are held of the Earl Patric by Walter (Corbet), son of William, and Joan his wife.⁶ Sir Walter Corbet also obtained from Walter, son of John de Edlineham, five acres of land and 6d. rent in the Pykelees, two acres of meadow in the Hertisfollinge and pasture in Edlingham, except in the Haynyng, with ingress and egress.⁷

Leureshelf is mentioned in the Pipe Rolls of 1255, where the sheriff accounts, amongst the new oblations,⁸ for 12d. from the vill of Luerescheld, and at the Northumberland assizes held at Newcastle, January 20th, 1278/9, John de Leuerhilde was plaintiff and William Comyn and John

A somewhat different statement is made in an inquisition taken under a writ dated April 11th, 1247, concerning Earl Patric's lands. de Graham defendants in an action for assault at Jedworth, when the said John was beat, wounded and otherwise injured.¹ On April 25th, 1322, William Corbet of Langton in Glendale granted to William Strother and his wife the manor of Lenerchild, with the mill, five acres and one rood of arable land lying in the 'solum' of Edlingham in a place called Pykeles with 'marlers, quarers' and other pertinents and two acres of meadow in the same vill in a place called Hertessollyng.²

In an inquisition taken October 4th, 1337 it was found that Thomas Corbet held of Roger de Somervill,³ deceased, the manor of Stanton with tenements in Lenerychild by the service of half a knight's fee, and they were worth £10 per annum.⁴ On July 1st, 1355, Roger Corbet, who was described as lord of Lenerchilde, granted to Henry de Strother, certain lands at Lanton, and on July 1st, 1359, under the same description, he granted a letter of attorney respecting the same lands.⁵ Thomas Corbet was succeeded by his son John, born apparently about 1341.⁶ In 1360 Roger Corbet, who is described as son and heir of Walter Corbet, paid twenty marks to have certain forfeited lands at Learchild, Abberwick, and other places in Northumberland restored to him.⁷ If he was the Roger Corbet who took part in Gilbert de Middleton's rebellion in 1317, the forfeiture may be explained. In a receipt given to William de Swinburne, July 28th, 1368, Roger Corbet of Learchild mentions his brother, Richard Corbet.⁸ In the month of February, 1372, Eleanor, widow of John Corbet of Levirchilde, quitclaimed to Henry de Strother, her father, all her right in the manor of Lanton and in the holdings, etc., in West Newton and Kirknewton.⁹

The time when and the circumstances under which Learchild was acquired by the Lilburns are alike unknown, but Thomas Lilburn heads the Muster Roll of 1538.

LEARCHILD MUSTER ROLL, 1538.

Thomas Lyllborne, John Recherdson, John Lilborne, Rauff Potts, John Potts, Willme Softley, Robt. Atkinson, Thomas Atkinson, John Thomson, Willme Jobson. Hable wanting bothe horse and harness.¹

In a list of free tenants of the barony of Beaulvy, entered in a survey made in 1586, it is stated that a moiety of Leverchyld was then held by Thomas Lilburn under a free rent of 2s., and that Cuthbert Collingwood of Shipley held the other moiety under a similar payment.² Robert Clavering of Learchild died in 1611, administration of his personal estate being granted June 20th, 1611, to his sons Robert and Thomas, who were of full age, in trust for themselves and for their brothers and sisters, William, Matthew, Francis, Jane, Agnes, and Phillis Clavering, who were all under age. An inventory of the goods and chattels of the deceased, appraised by George Smith and Edward Hudson of Thrunton, exhibited at Durham the same year, comprised:

5 kine, £5; 40 ewes, £5; insight goodes, 6s. 8d.; lease of a tenement in Lamedon sould to Mr. George Beadnell for £9; corn sown on the said tenement, iii. bowels of wheat, £1 10s.; bear sown on the said tenement, iii. bushels, 10s.; 8 bowels of otts, £1 4s.; 1 brown horse, 10s.; corn sown in Learchild, 1 bowell of wheat, 10s.; a lod of ots, 6s. Debts owing to the testator: Thomas Lindsay of Chatton, £4; John Rosden of Bewick, 6s. 8d.; Ralph Rosden of Bewick, 7s. Sume, £28 10s. 4d.³

In a dispute respecting common of pasture in Edlingham and Newtown, Robert Clavering of Lyverchild, June 28th, 1611, procured an order 'to Lawrence Carr of Edlingham, gent., and Henry Charlton of the same, and all others the twenty farmers or occupiers of the said ground' from John Fenwick and George Muschampe, under 'a direction from the late Rt. Honor^{ble} Earle of Dunbar'⁴ . . . to cease upon sight hereof to molest or trouble the said Robert Clavering or any supporting him in the possession or occupation of the said ground or any parcel of the same until the right hereof be tryed between by a due course of his Majestie's lawes.' An agreement was subsequently effected, and in consideration of £60 Robert Clavering, September 22nd, 1612, released his rights to John Swinburne.⁵ The name of Robert Clavering of Learchild, gent., appears in the freeholder list of 1628 and 1638.⁶

On April 25th, 1650, Thomas Clavering of Learchild was fined £74 18s. 6d. for his delinquency, and May 25th, 1653, he petitioned the Committee for Compounding Cases that although he had compounded with the commissioners appointed by Parliament, had paid his fine and had obtained his discharge, the county commissioners refused to remove the sequestration without orders from the court, and that now his name was included in the late Act for Sale. His petition was successful, and the commissioners being of opinion that he ought to enjoy the benefit of his former composition discharged his estate.¹ Mr. Robert Clavering was rated for Learchild in 1663 at £50 per annum.

EVIDENCES TO STOREY PEDIGREE.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty, the humble petition of Fargus Storey, Master of Arts.

Sheweth that your petitioner's life and conversation, profession and adherence to the doctrine of the Church of England, and loyalty to your sacred majesty, appear by the certificate annexed. And the rectory of Rothbury, county of Northumberland, being void and in your majesty's gift, your petitioner most humbly prayeth your majesty to present him to the said living to be minister there. And your petitioner shall ever pray, etc.

I am assured by persons of credit that the petitioner is capable of his majesty's favour in this particular.—
GILB. LONDON, Nov. 9, 1660.

These are to certify that Fargus Storey, Master of Arts, of Christ's Colledge, in the University of Cambridge, a man of very good abilities and learning, well qualified for the work of the ministry, of a blameless life and conversation, was episcopally ordained, has constantly adhered to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England, and has been loyal to the king's majesty.

Before the close of the seventeenth century, Robert Clavering or his representatives sold a moiety of Learchild to John Storey of Beanley.

The last John Storey of High Learchild left two daughters and co-heiresses, one of whom married Thomas Buston of High Buston, by whose son, Roger Buston, this small estate comprising about 270 acres was sold in 1849 to the Hon. H. T. Liddell, and now belongs to Lord Ravensworth.

The Claverings lingered at Learchild until 1719, when Rachel Clavering, widow, made her will on July 28th of that year. She mentions her son Arthur Clavering, to whom she gives £5, and gives £30 to her daughter Margaret Grey of Alwick, and makes her sole executrix. She states that the inventory of her late husband's goods was in the hands of Mr. Thomas Burrell of Broome-park.¹ The position of the family at this time must have been that of tenants, for 'the moiety of the village or township of Leirchild, called east side of Leirchild, and messuages and lands in Leirchild, now or late in the occupation of Mr. Robert Clavering' had been acquired by Sir James Clavering of Newcastle, and were included in the settlement, dated May 9th, 1716, made on the marriage of his daughter Elizabeth with Nicholas Fenwick of Newcastle.² It has ever since been comprised in the Lemington estates.

ABBERWICK TOWNSHIP.

The township of Abberwick forms a compact area of 1,680 acres, bounded by Alnwick park and the township of Alnwick on the east, by Lemington on the south, and by Broom-park and Bolton on the west and north. It is watered by the river Aln, and contains the homesteads of Abberwick east and west demesnes, Moorlaws, Broomhill, and Abberwick mill,¹ the last mentioned lying in a sequestered spot on the right bank of the river Aln. The population has dwindled from 170 in 1841 to 65 in 1901.² Like the neighbouring townships of Bolton, Shawdon, and Titlington, Abberwick was a member of the barony of Ros, otherwise Wark-on-Tweed.³

The place is first mentioned in the Pipe Rolls of 1170, when Anthony de Alburwic renders account for one mark for taking greenwood; he paid it into the treasury and had a quittance.⁴ The vill of Alburwic is mentioned in 1214,⁵ and in 1253 the sheriff accounts for 2s. received from the vill of Alberwick for having cattle in the forest, as also their pigs, in the prohibited month.⁶ The Pipe Rolls of 1259, 1261, 1262, 1267, and 1269,⁷ respectively, contain entries recording the indebtedness of John, son of William de Abberwick, of one mark for having an assize or enquiry.

At the Northumberland Assizes in 1269, John, son of John de Edelingham, and Richard, his son, were charged with unjustly disseising John, son of William de Alberwyk, of his free tenement in Edlingham, comprising a messuage and thirty-seven acres of land: the plaintiff recovered and the defendants had to pay the costs, which amounted to three and a half marks.⁸ At the assizes in 1279 a certain Mr. Robert complained that Gregory of Alwinton, on the morrow of St. Oswald (August 6th), 1278, had assaulted him in the vill of Abberwick, striking him on the head so that blood flowed. Gregory was fined half a mark, but was afterwards pardoned.⁹

The Master Robert de Alburwic who heads the Subsidy Roll of 1296 may possibly have been the Robert de Bellingham from whom a certain William de Paxton held in Alburwyk a messuage and plough land by the service of 5s. 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. yearly.³ Paxton's lands, which had been taken into the king's hands on account of his rebellion and flight into Scotland, by an inquisition taken at Alnwick, August 6th, 1300, were worth 25s. 8d.;⁴ they were granted in 1329 to Robert de Newark, together with lands in Roddam, held by William de Rodom, to hold for ten years.⁵

In the inquisition taken at Newcastle on Saturday, November 13th, 1333, after the death of Richard de Emeldon, it was stated that he held in Abberwyk, of Henry de Percy, a fourth part of the vill, by the service of 5s. yearly; there was a capital messuage, eighty acres of land, and five acres of meadow in the hands of tenants at will who paid yearly 40s. He also held in Abberwyk one toft and twelve acres of land of the prior of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem for 6s. 8d. yearly rent; the land was worth 100s. in time of peace before its destruction by the Scots, but now it lies wholly waste and uncultivated through lack of tenants and poverty of the country side, and is of no yearly value in herbage or otherwise. Richard de Emeldon's heirs were his daughters, Agnes, wife of Adam Graper, aged twenty-seven years and upwards, Maud, wife of Richard de Acton, aged twenty-three years and upwards, and Jacoba, aged nine years and upwards.¹

On March 1st, 1333/4, Richard de Emeldon's widow, Christiana, had assignment of her dower in various places,² and on the same day certain lands at Abberwyk were assigned to Richard's eldest daughter Agnes, wife of Adam Graper, as part of her purparty of her father's lands.³ Other lands in Abberwick were assigned in 1334 to another of the daughters, Jacoba, or Jane,⁴ whose wardship had been granted, on the 1st May previous, to William de Denum.⁵ She became the second wife of Sir John de Strivelyn.⁶ In 1335 Richard, bishop of Durham, appointed Robert de Abberwyk to be second chaplain of the chantry founded by Richard de Emeldon in St. Nicholas' church, Newcastle.⁷

Agnes Graper died September 13th, 1349, seised of a toft and twelve acres of land in Alburwyk, held of the prior of the hospital of

Her heirs were her two daughters, Maud, wife of William de Strother, aged twenty-four years, and Alice, wife of Robert de Orde, aged twenty-three years.¹ The country at the period was so impoverished and the lack of tenants so great, that a cottage in Alburwyk held of Alan de Belyngeham by the service of a rose by Henry, son and heir of John Fitz Henry, a ward of the king, who died October 12th, 1349, was only worth 12d. a year; Henry was also seised of the manor of Whittingham, the hamlets of Thrunton and Barton, the vill of Netherton in Coquetdale, and lands and tenements in Glanton and Little Harle; his heir was his aunt Beatrice, aged twenty-four years and upwards, wife of Thomas de Fencotes, knight;² his father's widow, Cecilia, had her dower out of these places.³ Roger Corbet, son and heir of Walter Corbet, the proprietor of Learchild in 1360 owned lands in Abberwick.⁴ John de Orde,⁵ son of the above-named Robert de Orde, and Alice, his wife, died April 20th, 1414, seised of a third part of the vill of Abbirwyk, held as of the barony of Wark-on-Tweed by the payment of 4s. yearly; it was worth 10s. beyond reprises, and his heir was his son William de Orde, twenty-six years of age and upwards.⁶

Subsequently he obtained the king's pardon and the reversal of the outlawry, but apprehending that his opponent, Sir Roger, was about to revive the suit, he, in 1509, obtained the king's writ of prohibition to the escheator of Northumberland.¹ Ultimately Sir Roger Bellingham, November 1st, 1515, released his claim and entered into a bond for a certain sum of money not 'to vex or trouble the said Robert Bellingham' in Alberwyk, but 'peasably to suffer the said Robert quietly and restfully to occupie for ever by way of entre.'² Sir Roger Bellingham of Burneside, knight banneret, and his wife, Mabel, lie under a goodly tomb in Kendal church. Sir Cuthbert Radcliffe, knight, constable of Alnwick castle, at that time in the king's hands, and Robert Collingwood, esq., under a commission given at Westminster, March 1st, 1537/8, held a great muster on Abberwick moor, April 17th and 18th, 1538. The roll of names of those who presented themselves has been printed in Archaeologia Aeliana.¹ The vill of Abberwick provided sixteen able men who had neither horse nor harness.

The Feodary's book of 1568 states that Thomas Swinburne of Edlingham owned lands in Abberwick,³ but the entry concerning Alan Bellingham is imperfect and only mentions some farms near Bellingham.⁴

The name of Robert Collingwood of Abberwick was inserted in the Act of attainder for participation in the Rising of the North in 1569,⁵ and his lands escheated to the Crown. By a lease dated June 19th, 1569, Collingwood had granted certain lands at Abberwick to Nicholas Errington, gent., for the term of twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of £3 6s. 8d.,⁶ and at the same period Peter Nicholl had a cottage and garden held at the lord's will, paying 4s. yearly,⁷ and Collingwood had in his own hands the fulling mill in Abberwick (which he held freely by charter); it was worth, to be leased by the year, 33s. 4d.⁸

The long association of the family of Bellingham with Abberwick was apparently ended by the sale of the manorial corn mill in 1571 to John Shafto of Bavington by Henry Bellingham of Rottington, Cumberland, who, July 14th, 1571, acknowledged to have received on that day £30 in part payment.⁹

There is in the British Museum a rare black-letter tract, printed in London 'for Thomas Gosson, dwelling in Paul's Church-yard next the Gate, the corner shop to Cheapside, at the signe of the Goshawke in the sonn' entitled, 'A true report of a strange and monstereous child born at Aberwick, in the parish of Eglington (sic), in the Co. of Northumberland, this fifth of January, 1580.' It purports to describe a child of the male sex, shaped like two children from the shoulders upward, 'one ear on each head was shaped like an horse's and the other like an hog's;' it was the offspring of Elinor and John Urine, piper, aged twenty-six.¹

The muster of the men of Coquetdale and Redesdale was taken at Abberwick Edge, November 24th, 1595, by Francis Slingsby, Henry Anderson, and Nicholas Forster, the commissioners appointed for that purpose. There appeared eighty light horsemen furnished with spears, etc., eight horsemen furnished with petronels, 169 men whose horses were disallowed, etc.²

The dealings with Abberwick and the different estates there, at the close of the sixteenth century and the beginning of the seventeenth, were numerous and somewhat involved. Thomas Swinburne of Edlingham castle, by his will dated July 21st, 1572, gave his lands in Abberwycke and Mykle Bavington to his younger son William 'during his lyff.'³ William Swinburne's eldest brother, John Swinburne of Edlingham, May 8th, 1598, conveyed lands in Abberwick to Roger Grey of Chillingham and Arthur Grey, who reconveyed to the grantor's brother-in-law, George Collingwood of Eppleton and Eslington.⁴ George Collingwood, August 2nd, 1599, conveyed a moiety of the said lands to Roger Huntridge, and on April 3rd, 1602, he conveyed the other moiety and apparently the manor of Abberwick to his brother-in-law Nicholas Thornton of Netherwitton. The latter by a series of documents ranging from August 31st, 1604, to August 8th, 1608, conveyed to Roger Huntridge, who also on the last mentioned date had feoffment from Thomas Swinburne.⁵

The tenement held by Nicholas Errington, first of Robert Collingwood and, after his attainder, of the Crown, was granted by Queen Elizabeth, August 12th, 1600, for the term of twenty-one years, at the rent of £3 6s. 8d. to Robert Andrews, who was to find a sufficient man and horse for the queen's service when required by the warden of the marches.¹ These lands were granted November 26th, 1609, to George Salter and John Williams, in part satisfaction of large sums of money advanced to the king by certain citizens of London, to hold as of the manor of East Greenwich in socage by fealty only.² The grantees conveyed this part of the premises so granted to Sir William Hewitt, knight, and John Hewitt, who, May 22nd, 1612, sold to Thomas Collingwood of Little Ryle, and the latter, March 14th, 1615/6, reconveyed to a certain Robert Collingwood³ of Abberwick, who has not been identified, but who may have been a descendant of the person of that name who was attainted in 1569.⁴ 'Mr. Collingwood,' was owner of lands in Abberwick in 1663, the value of which is not entered in the Book of Rates,⁵ but shortly afterwards they were acquired by Edward Huntridge, who, by will dated May 4th, 1675, gave all his lands in Abberwick (save a certain house and the Leager Croft, which he bequeathed to his daughter Mary) to his daughter Ann Huntridge, who, May 7th, 1677, conveyed the same to John Storey of Beanley.⁶

A capital messuage and farmhold in Abberwick, perhaps parcel of the possession of the dissolved hospital of Bolton, were conveyed, November 20th, 1656, by Henry Widdrington of Blackheddon, the proprietor of Bolton, to John Chesman of Woodhall in Bolton; the consideration was £60.⁷ These lands also seem to have been acquired by Thomas Huntridge, who in 1663 was rated for his lands in Abberwick at £100 per annum.⁸

1669, 31st May. Will of Thomas Huntridge of Abberwick, gent. All I have to my wife. Proved 1669. Ibid.

Although Francis Huntridge sold Abberwick east demesne to Thomas Burrell of Broome-park in 1678, his circumstances became more and more involved, and ten years later he mortgaged the west demesne to Thomas Smith of Togston to secure £130, and in the following year, by lease and release, dated May 30th and 31st, 1689, he conveyed it to Sir James Clavering of Axwell, bart., to secure the sum of £630.

'All that manor, hamlet, village and township of Abberwick in the said county of Northumberland, with the rights, members and appurtenances. And one chief messuage with the appurtenances in Abberwick called the Tower. And all that other messuage with the appurtenances called the Nether Hall in Abberwick aforesaid. And all those lands and tenements, woods, wastes and hereditaments lying in Abberwick aforesaid called or known by the name of the Demesnes. And also one farm and one half farm, with their appurtenances, in Abberwick aforesaid, then late in the tenure or occupation of Roger Huntrodes or his assigns. And also two other farms with their appurtenances in Abberwick aforesaid, whereof the one was then late in the occupation of John Gall and the other then late in the occupation of John Lawson. And also six several cottages in Abberwick aforesaid with their appurtenances, then in the possession of the said Francis Hunteridge, his farmers or tenants,' etc.¹

A fine was levied in Trinity term, 1 William and Mary, in which Sir James Clavering, bart., was plaintiff and Francis Huntridge and Katherine his wife deforciant. Finally, on November 9th, 1697, Huntridge, with his mortgagee, in consideration of £1,400, conveyed Abberwick west demesne to Thomas Burrell of Broome-park,² whose collateral descendant, Captain W. M. Burrell, is the present owner.³

The estate, purchased in 1677 by John Storey of Beanley, was settled, January 7th, 1697/8, on the marriage of his third son, Ralph Storey, with Frances, daughter of Ralph Forster of Elford and Hartlaw, and sister of Robert Forster of Hartland, who was party to the settlement. It was resettled by Ralph Storey and his eldest son Joseph, April 14th, 1725, one moiety being charged with portions to be paid to Ralph's daughters and a younger son George on their respective marriages.¹ The moiety so charged was sold in 1761 to Bryan Burrell of Broome-park in order to pay off the sums borrowed from time to time to discharge the said marriage portions, and the residue of the estate, which comprised about 160 acres,² was sold in 1807 by Ralph Storey, then residing at Alnwick, to William Burrell of Broome-park, who in this way became possessed of the entire township.

The farm called Moor-laws, comprising over 500 acres, adjoining the walls of Alnwick park at the eastern side of the township, was sold in 1849 by Mr. Bryan Burrell to the Duke of Northumberland.

The field immediately to the west of Abberwick farm cottages is called the Dunkirk-field. In a hollow of the field is 'a stone always a favourite spot for the lambs sleeping and playing, supposed (by local tradition) to be the step of the church door. There is no evidence to prove, nor are there any grounds for thinking, that a chapel ever existed at this place, but the spot, around which there are many mounds, may possibly have been the site of the tower of Abberwick mentioned in the mortgage deed of 1689.

BOLTON AND BROOME-PARK TOWNSHIPS.

The townships of Bolton and Broome-park, forming the parochial chapelry of Bolton, occupy the northern part of the parish of Edlingham. They constitute a manor or lordship of the same name, within the barony of Ros or, as it is otherwise called, Wark-on-Tweed.³ The township of Bolton covers 1,740 acres, that of Broome-park 471 acres, and together they extend from north-east to south-west three and a half miles. The population of Bolton has fallen from 161 in 1851 to 89 in 1901, and that of Broome-park from 78 to 37.⁴

The Census Returns of Broome-park are : 1801, 64; 1811, 64; 1821, 43; 1831, 53; 1841, 63; 1851, 78; 1861, 77; 1871, 65; 1881, 58; 1891, 50; 1901, 37.

Few prehistoric remains have been found in the district. The bottom of a bronze patella, formed with concentric circles in high relief, was found many years ago in the field near the chapel called the 'Guards.' It is figured in Archæologia Acliana (vol. xv., p. 165), and is preserved in the collection of the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries. A copper vessel twelve inches in diameter and six inches in depth, found near the chapel about seventy years ago, is figured in the History of the Berwickshire Naturalist Club (vol. xi., p. 312), and is preserved at Shawdon.

A sepulchral vessel of the type called 'food vessel,' of a very fine though not uncommon form, unearthed near Bolton-house, is preserved at Alnwick castle. It is six inches in height, six inches wide at the top, and three inches at the bottom. The whole of its exterior surface and the inside of the rim is ornamented. The small circular marks on it have been made by the end of a reed cut straight across, the chevron and diamond markings by a sharp-pointed instrument.

From the thirteenth to the sixteenth century the history of Bolton is the history of the Bolton hospital, the master and brethren of which institution held the lordship and lands of the manor of Bolton from 1225 down to the dissolution of the hospital at the time of the Reformation.

Walter Espec, lord of Wark-on-Tweed, who died in 1153, endowed the priory, which he founded in 1121 at Kirkham in Yorkshire, with (amongst other things) the churches of Newton in Glendale and Ilderton, the villis of Carham and Titlington, and two parts of the tithes of Mindrum and Bolton.¹ Disputes about the tithes of the demesne of Bolton having arisen between the prior and convent of Kirkham and A . . . , rector of Edlingham, a mandate was issued by Pope Innocent (1204-1214) to Simon, dean, and Hamo, treasurer, of York, and William, archdeacon of Nottingham. Through the agency of this commission an agreement was come to whereby the two parts of the tithes of Bolton were transferred to the prior and convent of Durham, who owned the advowson of Edlingham, and by which the prior and convent agreed to pay to the canons of Kirkham four marks of silver yearly.¹

Bolton (Boyeltun) seems to have been the place where King John met William the Lion, of Scotland, in 1209.²

Bolton remained in the hands of Walter Espec's successors until Robert de Ros, husband of Isabella, a natural daughter of William the Lion, king of Scotland, before or about 1225, founded at Bolton a hospital for a master, three chaplains, and thirteen lepers, dedicated to St. Thomas the martyr, and placed it under the supervision of, or granted it to, the monasteries of Kirkham and Rievaulx. As a provision for the maintenance of the house the founder gave to the master and brethren the villas of Bolton and Mindrum, with lands in Palexton (Pawston) and Kilham in Northumberland, etc.³ The master and brethren were to keep a good

The word Boyeltun should probably be read Botheltun, 'thorn,' th having been mistaken by the transcriber for y. Cf. supra, p. 39, note 3. The name Botheltun is probably from the same root as Bothel, Buston, Lorbottle, etc. Cf. vol. v. of this work, p. 416.

³ Omnibus sanctæ matris ecclesiæ filiis, hæc cartam visuris vel auditoris, Robertus de Roos, salutem in Domino. Noverit universitas vestra, me pro salute animæ meæ et omnium antecessorum et successorum meorum, dedisse, concessisse et hæc præsentî cartâ meâ confirmasse Deo et beatæ Mariæ et hospitali sancti Thomæ martyris de Bovelton in Northumberland, et tribus fratribus et capellanis, et tresdecim leprosis masculis tantum, et cæteris fratribus laicis in eodem hospitali imperpetuum Deo servientibus, totam villam dictam Bovelton, cum molendino et cum omnibus pertinentiis suis, infra villam et extra, sine aliquo retenemento; et molendinum de Mindrum, cum tota secta sua, et omnibus pertinentiis; et dimidiam carucatam terræ in Palexton, cum omnibus pertinentiis suis, quam Will. de Palexton vendidit mihi sicut cartâ ipsius Willelmi testatur; et duas bovatas terræ cum omnibus pertinentiis suis in villa de Killum, quas prædictus Willelmus mihi vendidit, et quas Robertus niger tenuit; et servicium duarum bovatarum terræ in Palexton, quas Rogerus de Coppegrave tenet in feodo et hereditate. Et in Lincolnensi dioecesi totam villam de Stroxtun juxta Graham, et ecclesiam ejusdem villæ, cum omnibus pertinentiis eorum, sine aliquo retenemento; et omnes terras cum pertinentiis suis, quas habui in duabus Pantons juxta Stroxtun, quæ terræ pertinent ad dominum ejusdem villæ de Stroxtun, et molendina mea de Stroxtun et de prænominatis Pantons. Et in Eborasyre totam terram meam cum pertinentiis suis quam Brianus Grandys mihi vendidit in Eluel et in Swanesland, cum pastura sufficiente trecentis ovibus juxta Humbriam, sicut cartâ ipsius Briani testatur; et in Middelton juxta Dalton unum molendinum ventriticum, cum pertinentiis suis; et in Garton unum toftum et unum croftum, quod Reinerus de Garton mihi vendidit. Hæc omnia superscripta dedi, concessi, et hæc præsentî cartâ meâ confirmavi prædictis fratribus in liberam, puram, et perpetuam elemosinam ita libere et quiete, sicut aliqua elemosina liberius et quietius dari potest. Præterea noveritis me, pro tranquillitate et indemnitatem prædictorum fratrum conservandis, dedisse, concessisse, et hæc præsentî cartâ meâ confirmasse præfatum hospitale liberum, solum, et quietum de me et heredibus meis imperpetuum; ita quod nec ego, nec heredes mei, nec homines mei dominatione vel table, dress neatly, and after providing themselves with things necessary and convenient were to apply the remainder of their income to the relief of the poor and of strangers.

The grant was confirmed by the bishop of Durham, the archbishop of York, and by the king in 1227,¹ and in the same year there was a confirmation by the king of a settlement made by Robert de Ros on his son Robert of the castle of Wark-on-Tweed with the lands, etc., thereto belonging, with the exception of Bodelton, the mill of Mindrum, half a carucate of land in Paloxton, two bovates of land in Killum, the service of Roger de Coppegrave for two bovates of land in Paloxton, all of which he had given by charter to St. Mary and the brethren of the hospital of St. Thomas the martyr in Bodelton.² There was a suit in 1229 and 1230 between the master of the hospital of Bolton and William de Lemoketon, respecting tenements in Bolton.³

On April 15th, 1233, the master and brethren of Boulton obtained a licence to stub 80 acres of land, as measured by the king's perch, on Bolton moor adjoining the hospital on the north and east, also 40 acres of alderwood and osier-bed lying between the hospital and Birchefald

potestate aliqua, vel aliquo alio modo, aliquod jus vendicabimus nobis in praedicto hospitali, hospitandi, vel perendinandi, vel aliquo disponendi: et praedictos fratres liberos servabimus a perendinatione hominum, equorum, canum, avium nostri vel heredum nostrorum. Et sciendum est quod magister praedicti hospitalis sibi et capellanis et praedictis fratribus ordinate, libere, et licite in victu et vestitu, de elemosinis collatis et conferendis, necessaria ministrabit et omnia quae superfuerint de ipsis elemosinis, in susceptionem pauperum et peregrinorum ministrabit. Cum autem magister praedicti loci obierit, vel magistratum forte resignaverit, vel ad aliquam aliam placeam vocatus fuerit, praedicti abbas et prior magistrum, scilicet capellanum, loco ejus subrogabunt, quemcumque ad haec ydoneum invenerint, infra donum illam vel extra, dum tamen habitum ejusdem domus habeat. Si vero aliquis magistrorum enormiter deliquerit, et post primam, secundam, et tertiam ammonitionem contumasse, rebellis, et incorrigibilis repertus fuerit, per praedictos abbatem et priorem ab officio suo amoveatur, vel a domo illa penitus eliminetur, si tamen ipsam demeruerit, et alius dignus fuerit loco ejus subrogetur. Ego autem et heredes mei manutenebimus, warrantabimus, defendemus et acquietabimus praedictum hospitale, et omnes suprascriptos libere, quiete, et absolute ab omnibus serviciis et exactionibus et consuetudinibus, tam regis quam alius, versus reges et omnes denominationes et omnes homines, in liberam, puram, et perpetuam elemosinam, et praedictum hospitale in omnibus servabimus indempne. wood on the east, and to enclose the said lands by a 'dike and hedge,' so that the beasts of the chase might not have ingress and egress.¹ On March 19th, 1234/5, they obtained a grant that the lands so enclosed, described as 120 acres taken out of the moor, and 150 acres taken out of Boulton wood, should be disafforested and quit of waste and regard of the forest or view of forester, verderers, etc.²

During the priorate of Ralph Kerneth (1216-1233) a licence was granted by the prior and the convent of Durham to the leper brethren in the island at Booltone to build a chapel. The master and brethren were to pay all their tithes to the church of Edlingham, except the tithe of gardens and hens, which the prior and convent gave them for the sake of charity. The leper brethren and others regularly wearing their dress were to be buried in the said chapel. All others were to repair to the parish church of Edlingham or to the chapel in the vill of Bolton where they were to receive the divine offices and where they might be buried.³ Walter the chaplain, master of the hospital of Bothel-tone, and the leper brethren on their part entered into a corresponding agreement.⁴

There are a few entries in the Pipe Rolls relating to the place. In 1201 the sheriff accounts for a mark from the vill of Bolton for ancient waste.¹ The name of Austin, son of Orm of Bolton, occurs several times between 1234 and 1241, and about the same period William Fulco of Boulton rendered account of 12d. on the plea of Robert Goleweyet of Harehope. In 1234 William, son of Austin of Bolton, rendered account for 2s., and Siward the miller of Bolton 12d. for a purpresture. In the same year the master of Boulton owed 20s. for eight acres 'excol. in eadem,' and Master Walter de Boulton owed 4s. for eight acres 'au.,' and Simon Pellipar of Bolton rendered account for 12d.² Amongst the socage tenants of the barony of Ros in the early part of the thirteenth century the lepers of Bowylton held Bowylton in alms and did no service.³

In 1234, Walter the chaplain, the master, and the brethren of the hospital took a lease from the prior and convent of Durham, for the term of ten years, at a yearly rent of 20 marks, of all the tithe of sheaves and of the young of animals arising out of their lands in the parish of Edlingham, also the corn tithes of Bolton, the oblations and obventions as well of living as of dead of the said vill of Bolton, and of the secular persons living in the hospital, with all lands belonging to the chapel situated in the vill of Bolton, etc. All the seculars at Bolton, whether residing in the hospital or in the vill, were to repair to the mother church of Edlingham three times a year, viz., at the feasts of Christmas, Easter, and St. John Baptist's day; they were to make their confession there in Lent, and to receive the sacrament at Easter. Children were to be carried to Edlingham for baptism, and marriages were to be solemnized there, but the emoluments accruing were to be handed by the vicar to the master of the hospital, who was also to receive of the hands of the vicar the Holy Bread money offered by the men of Bolton. The master or his substitute was to say mass three times a week in the chapel of the vill of Bolton.⁴

⁴ Anno Incarnacionis Domini m^occ^o tricesimo quarto ad Pentecostem, facta est haec conventio inter Thomam priorem et conventum Dunelm. et Walterum capellanum magistrum hospitalis et fratres leprosos de Booltone, scilicet, quod praedicti prior et conventus dimiserunt ad firmam usque ad finem decem annorum praedictis W. et fratribus leprosis vel ei, qui pro tempore loco ipsius W. dicti hospitalis magistri substituetur: si dictus W. dicto hospitali cesserit vel in fata concesserit omnes decimas

A similar agreement was entered into at Whitsuntide, 1244, between Thomas (Melsonby), prior, and the convent of Durham on the one part and Walter the chaplain, the master, and the brethren of the hospital of Bolton on the other, by which the prior and convent leased at a perpetual rent for ever to the hospital all tithes of sheaves and of the young of animals accruing from the hospital lands within the parish of Edlingham.¹

In a suit between the prior and convent and the hospital about the chapel of Bolton, which was claimed by the former body, a papal instrument² was produced, taking the master and brethren of the hospital and their possessions into the protection of the Holy See. The delegate appointed by the bishop to hear the evidence, in which counter accusations were freely made by either side, decided that the chapel should be restored to the convent, and condemned the hospital to pay a considerable sum of money. By an agreement reduced to writing in the Galilee, October 6th, 1276,³ the master and brethren undertook to restore the chapel, but were thenceforward to be free from the payment of tithes on their cultivated lands, gardens, bushes, etc., and also of the young garbarum et omnes decimas de nutrimentis animalium infra limites parochiae de Edelwingham ad dictam domum de Booltone pertinentium, omnes etiam decimas bladi villae de Booltone et omnes obventiones et oblationes, tam vivorum quam mortuorum, dictae villae et secularium commorantium in dicto hospitali, cum tota terra pertinente ad capellam sitam in villa de Booltone, cujus terrae una pars cum duabus acris prati jacet versus orientem dictae villae, alia vero pars versus meridiem, pro viginti marcis argenti annuatim ad duos terminos eisdem priori et conventui reddendis, scilicet decem marcis ad festum Sancti Martini in hyeme et decem marcis ad Pentecosten: ita scilicet quod omnes seculares tam in dicto hospitali quam in dicta villa de Booltone commorantes, ter in anno venient ad matricem ecclesiam de Edelwingham, scilicet, in Natali Domini, in Pascha et in Nativitate Sancti Johannis Baptistae cum oblationibus suis. Facient autem omnes praedicti seculares confessiones suas in Quadragesima capellano de Edelwingham, et in die Paschae apud Edelwingham Eucharistiam percipient: similiter et parvuli dictae villae de Booltone sacramentum Baptismi. Fient etiam ibidem omnia sponsalia sua et emolumentum inde proveniens dictus W. vel ejus substitutus percipient per manum vicarii. Dabunt etiam homines commorantes in villa de Booltone panem benedictum matri ecclesiae de Edelwingham, more solito, sed denarios, qui cum pane praedicto solet offeri, dictus W. vel ejus substitutus percipient per manum vicarii. Faciet autem dictus W. vel ipsius substitutus in capella sita in villa de Booltone ter in ebdomada ex consuetudine divina celebrari. Si vero ita contingat quod solutio dictarum viginti marcarum ad praefatos terminos facta non fuerit cessabit capella leprosorum in insula constructa usque dum facta fuerit plene solutio. Percipiet etiam praedictus W. vel ejus substitutus integre omnes oblationes trium festivitatum praedictarum per manum vicarii de Edelwingham. Elapso autem termino decem annorum omnia praedicta tam in decimis quam obventionibus, oblationibus, teris et ceteris omnibus praenominatis sine omni retenemento et absque cujuslibet contradictione integre et pacifice ad ecclesiam de Edelwingham revertentur, videlicet anno Incarnationis Dominicae m.ccc. quadragesimo quarto ad Pentecosten. Et ut praedicta rata et inconcussa usque ad terminum praedictum permanent, appositum est huic scripto ex una parte sigillum capituli Dunelm. et ex alia sigillum dicatorum leprosorum.

On March 16th, 1285/6, a commission of oyer et terminer was issued to John de Reygate and Geoffrey Aguilon on the complaint of Hugh de Norham, that Gilbert de Shireburn, master of the hospital of St. Thomas of Boulton, brother Robert de Hedereslawe, brother William de Re[n]jington, brother Peter de Boulton, Adam de Oterington, William de Brankeston, Adam, his son, Roger le mercer, Hugh le forester, Thomas de Lemokton, Richard le porter, William de Frue, Walter de Ryhull, Gilbert le cuper, Richard le caretter, and William Bernard had burned his houses at Branxton in the county of Northumberland, and carried away his goods.¹

By a document dated 4 ides May, 1279, the tenths from the hospital for the use of the Pope were remitted.²

On July 2nd, 1292, Edward I., at Berwick, granted an inspeximus and confirmation of letters patent, dated at Westminster, October 18th, 1231, being a grant to the master of St. Thomas the martyr at Boulton, that he (the master) might appoint an attorney to such suit at the wapentake of Graham in Lincolnshire as might be due from him yearly by reason of his manor of Stroweston, which he had by the gift of Robert de Ros.³

Et cum coram magistro Ada de Brentone perpetuo vicario de Auckeland et magistro Henrico de Burtone officiali domini Dunelm. archidiaconi commissariis venerabilis patris domini Dunelm. episcopi tam magister et fratres de Bouiltone quam prior et conventus Dunelm. in Galilea Dunelm. legitime comparerent die Mercurii proximo ante dominicam qua cantatur "Letare Jerusalem" et die Jovis sequente cum dicta die Mercurii continuata petente procuratori prioris et conventus quod in praedicta causa procederetur secundum retroacta, magister hospitalis de Bouiltone exhibuit quoddam procuratorium iudicibus directum in quo continebatur quod fratres de Bouiltone dederant ei potestatem componendi, transigendi in dicta causa et quodlibet genus sacramenti praestandi, nec non et renunciandi appellacioni per eosdem fratres ad sedem apostolicam interpositae, et petiit quod posteretur simplicitati suae, et ut prior et conventus misericorditer condescenderent ad hoc ut starent priori compositioni et perciperent omnes fructus et proventus dictae capellae a dicto die Sancti Martini. Et dictus magister juravit pro se et in animas fratrum de Bouiltone quod fideliter per omnia conservarent praedictam compositionem et in nullo contravenirent. Renunciavit etiam dictus magister expresse nomine suo et fratrum appellacioni ad sedem apostolicam per eosdem fratres interpositae de qua superius fit mencio, prior vero et conventus, licet juste possent exigere quadraginta libras eis debitas nomine expensarum et interesse, nolentes agere ad vindictam, remiserunt dictam pecuniam eis. On April 18th, 1312, a commission of oyer et terminer was issued to William de Felton and Thomas de Fyssheburne touching the persons who, at Bolton, killed Arnald de Carmes, the king's serjeant-at-arms.¹

In 1313, an assessment of £2 10s. 8½d. was made on the master of the house of lepers at Bolton for the fifteenth granted by the clergy,² but on December 12th of the same year a writ of respite was granted for 'the master of the House of God of the Lepers of Boulton' for the payment of £2 11s. 8½d., because the said master states that he does not hold any ecclesiastical benefice.³ On June 25th, 1315, and again on July 10th, 1316, master William de Quikham, or Quykham, dean of Lanchester, and master of the hospital of St. Thomas the martyr at Bolton, had protection for a year.⁴

When William de Ros of Hamelak conveyed the castle of Wark-on-Tweed, with its appurtenances, to the king in 1317, in exchange for other estates elsewhere, he reserved to himself the advowsons of the cells pertaining to the priory of Kirkham and the hospital of Boulton.⁵

The 'piles' of Boltone and Whittinghame (Wytingam) were held against the king in 1318 by Roger Purvays, who, with two others, was taken by the garrisons of Bamburgh, Alnwick, and Warkworth. In a petition to the king by David de Langeton and Thomas de Heton,

Purveys is described as 'an open traitor and one of the greatest evildoers on the march,' and the petitioners pray that he may be hanged and quartered, and desire to know the king's pleasure in regard to the others.¹

In the early part of the fourteenth century, the prior and convent of Durham and the prior and canons of Kirkham agreed that the pension of four marks due to the latter for the tithes of Bolton should be charged on the rent of Holtby, as that place was near to Kirkham, and that the tithes usurped by the bursar should be restored to the sacrist of Durham.²

Master Thomas de Goldyngham, the king's surgeon, July 24th, 1329, obtained a grant of the custody of the hospital of Bolton, with a mandate to the sheriff to induct him.³ The grant was revoked on the 3rd October following,⁴ and it was found by an inspection of the charter of foundation that the hospital was not in the king's gift; moreover, the appointment was not vacant, for William de Quykhham, the master, was still alive.⁵ Goldyngham did not at once relinquish his design to obtain the preferment and obtained a new grant, which was entered in the Patent Rolls of November 22nd, 1329⁶; William de Quicham, however, retained possession, and in 1331 was able, with the assent of the abbot of Rievaulx and the prior of Kirkham 'to demit the custody' to Thomas de Baumburgh in consideration of the respect and affection he had long had towards him, and 'who from his youth had served the late king,' etc.⁷ This was ratified by the king, July 18th, 1331.⁸

² Pro decimis de Boltone est notandum, quod tempore Hugonis Episcopi, qui obiit anno Domini m.c. nonagesimo quarto, ecclesia de Edlyngeham, in cujus parochia capella de Boltone situatur, fuit appropriata priori et conventui Dunelm., assignata per ipsum episcopum una medietate fabricae ecclesiae tantum alia medietate reservata ad dispositionem prioris et conventus. et licet non habeatur expresse tamen est verisimile quod prior et conventus assignaverunt villam de Boltone cum capella et hospitale cum pertinenciis officio bursariae, eo quod bursarius occupavit sibi per plures annos, consequenter anno regni regis Henrici iiiⁱⁱ tricesimo sexto, qui est annus Incarnacionis Dominicae m.c.c.lii, mota est lis super decimis provenientes de duabus partibus de dominico de Boltone per priorem de Kyrkham contra priorem et conventum Dunelm., et tunc inter priorem Dunelm. et ipsum conventum fuit concordatum quod pensio iiii marcarum annuatim solveretur priori de Kyrkham pro dictis decimis, qua pensio fuit soluta quam per vicarium quam per alios sine interrupcione usque ad annum Edwardi iiiⁱⁱ octavum decimum, qui est annus Incarnacionis Dominicae m.ccc. 30, et tunc per quinque annos cessabat solucio dictae pensionis quousque per placitum in Banco Regis fuit recuperata, et tunc fuit ordinatum per priorem Dunelm. quod dicta pensio solveretur de redditu de Holtby, eo quod locus ille vicinior est prioratui de Kyrkham, et in hujus oneris recompensacionem assignatae fuerunt officio sacristariae decimae de Boltone, ut patet per rotulos compotorum bursarii, quas sacristae pro hujusmodi onere supportando per plures annos occupaverunt, quousque per violenciam bursariorum ab officio sacristariae fuerunt subtractae, onere stante cum sacrista, unde petit sacrista quod onus transeat cum emolumento vel reddatur causa rationali quare non. *Dur. Soon after his appointment as keeper of the hospital, Thomas de Baumburgh granted a charge of £113 6s. 8d. to Master Thomas de Garnton.¹ The affairs of the hospital were apparently in confusion on account of losses during the wars with Scotland, and by the king's favour Thomas de Baumburgh obtained, October 28th, 1332, an exemption, so long as he should continue to hold the hospital, from all fifteenths, tenths, quotas, aids, and tallage due from him and his villains of Bolton and of Strouston, Great and Little Paunton in Lincolnshire.² On April 19th, 1335, Thomas de Baumburgh obtained a grant of free warren to him and his successors, wardens of the hospital of Boulton, in all his demesne lands of Boulton, Middleton, Killum, Palkeston and Brankeston in Northumberland, Strouston, Great and Little Paunton in Lincolnshire.³ On December 26th, 1335, he obtained a confirmation of a grant made to the master and brethren by Christiana, lady of Shawdon, of a toft and croft in Shawdon with pasture for 1 horse, 2 cows, and 20 hoggets (bidentes) and 100s. of rent charged on the mill and on the farm of the vill of Shawdon.⁴

In response to his petition that the late king was bound to the late keeper in £14 11s. 3d. for sheep purchased from the hospital about the year 1313 for the use of the royal household, as certified by the bill of the clerk of the kitchen, although the wardrobe books which would have proved the purchase were lost in the conflict at Stirling, the king granted, March 10th, 1335/6, the said sum to Thomas de Baumburgh, to be paid out of the issues of the customs of Newcastle.⁵ On June 3rd of the same year he had licence to crenellate the dwelling place of Boulton hospital.⁶ In the same month he obtained for his brother Alexander Dughan of Bamburgh an exemption for the term of his life from being called upon to serve at assizes, on juries, etc., and from being appointed mayor, bailiff, etc.⁷

Thomas de Baumburgh, who also held the hospital of St. Mary Magdalen at Berwick, and the rectory of Embleton,⁸ died April 15th, 1340.⁹ John (Fossour), prior, and the convent of Durham, on August 7th, 1343, granted to William de Wyggynton, vicar of Edlingham, as an augmentation of his stipend, the tithes of wool, lambs, cheese, calves, geese, hens, dovecotes, piglings, gardens, hay, beer, of milk, etc., of wax and grass arising out of the vill of Bouletone. The vicar was to find a fitting chaplain to say mass three times in the week in the chapel of the vill of Bouleton, viz., on Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday. The vicar executed a counterpart, and as his seal was not known to many the seal of the bishop's official was attached to it.¹ Thomas de Bamburgh was succeeded by Richard de Sixendale, parson of Gedenay, who, May 21st, 1341, acknowledged that he owed £23 5s. 4d. to his predecessor's executors, Thomas de Sibthorp, William de Emeldon, Robert de Tughale, and John de Pokelyngton, to be levied in default of payment on his lands, chattels, and ecclesiastical goods in Northumberland.²

Apparently in resentment of the new order of things, Richard de Syxindale the new master, William de Kenigthorpe, senescall, and Simon de Bolton, chaplain, seized the goods of the chapel in the vill of Bolton, as set out in a list remaining in the treasury at Durham. They comprised the oblations offered in the chapel of the hospital, 2s. offered on the day of the Epiphany by the bishop (Richard de Bury) and his suite; two tithe calves of the age of one year from the stock of the hospital due at Martinmas last past; the milk of 300 ewes of the past summer, the milk of 16 cows of the same summer, 2s.; tithe of hay of 30 acres of meadow, 12s.; generally all great and small tithes belonging of common right to the rector; one missal belonging to the chapel situated in the vill of Bolton, without the hospital, one chalice, one set of vestments complete, with a corporal, all of which had been maliciously carried off after the death of Sir Thomas de Bamburgh to the prejudice and liberty of the church.³

Dur. Treas. Misc. Chart. No. 5173.

On March 1st, 1418, Sir Richard Pyngille, vicar of Edlingham, was compelled, in a bond for £100, to agree to content himself, so long as he remained vicar, with a certain quantity of the lesser tithes of the hospital and vill of Bolton.¹ And by a lease dated June 5th, 1452, William (de Ebchester), prior, and the convent of Durham, for the rent of 10s. a year, to be paid to the sacrist, granted to John Burn, master of the hospital of St. Thomas the martyr of Bolton, the chapel of Bolton with the fruits, oblations, etc., of the chapel, town and hospital of Bolton, the tithes only excepted for the term of fifteen years, the master to find a sufficient and fit priest to serve the chapel.²

On February 16th, 1475/6, Alexander, Lord Hume, was ordered by James III. to meet the master of Boltoune at the Tweed, and to escort him, as envoy of Edward IV., to his presence.³

In the treasury at Durham there are three seals of Bolton hospital. The first,¹ attached to a charter given in 1239, is pointed oval, 1½ in. by 7⁄8 in. A demi-bishop (St. Thomas the martyr) blessing (?) seen in front holding a crozier (?), the head wanting, beneath a figure kneeling and praying to right.

Before the battle of Flodden, in 1513, Lord Surrey marched from Alnwick on Monday, September 5th, and took field at Bolton.² In the words of the chronicler:

On Mondaie, the fift daie of September, the earle tooke his field at Bolton in Glendale as he had appointed, where all the noble-men and gentlemen met him with their retinues, to the number of six and twentie thousand men. And about midnight next insuing came the trumpet which went to Rouge Crosse and declared how the King of Scots, after the message doone to him by Rouge Crosse, according to his instructions, the said King detained him and sent one Hlaie, an herald of his with him unto the earle, to declare to him the King's pleasure: to whom the earl sent Yorke herald at armes to accompanie the said Hlaie, at a village called Milo, two miles from the field, untill the coming thither of the said earle the next morrow. . . . Then the earle, joiuous of the King's answer, returned to his campe and set forward five miles to a place called Woller-haugh in such order of battell, as even then he should have fought, and there lodged for that night.³

At the dissolution of religious houses, the priory of Mount St. John in Yorkshire held 8s. in rents and fermes of divers lands and tenements in Bolton, parcel of the possessions of the Order of the Hospitallers.¹ The Ministers' Accounts of Bolton have not been found.

The lordship and manor of Bolton, and of Tittington, and lands in Ellingham and Branxton, of the clear yearly value of £31 15s., were granted by the Crown, April 9th, 1553, to Robert Collingwood of Eslington, esq., and Alexander Collingwood, gent., and the heirs of Robert, in consideration of the sum of £766 13s. 4d., to hold of the king by the tenure of a fortieth part of a knight's fee.²

This grant did not comprise the site of the cell which, with a garden, about six acres of meadow, and a croft called Ryecrofte, containing about ten acres, was granted June 22nd, 1575, to John Sonkye and Percival Gunson, in consideration of a sum of money, to hold of the queen as of the manor of East Greenwich in common socage.³

Bolton was owned by Sir Cuthbert Collingwood of Eslington in 1580, when two of his tenants appeared at a muster for the middle marches taken by Sir John Forster.⁴ Amongst the bills⁵ filed at a meeting of the wardens of the marches, March 12th, 1589/90, Sir Cuthbert Collingwood and his servant James Scott of Bowtown claimed upon Richard Frame of the Wood-end, Charles, Mark and George Burne of Elishewgh, for six horses and mares stolen in March, 1587, and for compensation for injuries done to John Collingwood of Tittington,⁶ who was 'strokenn' from his horse while following the stolen goods.

Six footmen from Bolton presented themselves at the muster taken at Abberwick Edge, November 24th, 1595,⁷ viz., James Jackson, Thomas Gibson, sen., Thomas Gibson, jun., Jo. Huntrodes and William Lucky, provided with spears, and Christopher Crissope with a lance.

With Eslington and other places, Bolton was included in the settlement of his estates made by Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, who at his death in 1596 was succeeded by his grandson, Robert Collingwood.⁸ The latter died without issue about the year 1638, seised of the manor of Bolton, two messuages in Broome-park and five messuages in Titlington, etc.¹ Very soon after Bolton and Broome-park were acquired by the Widdringtons of Black Heddon. In consideration of the sum of £1,150, Henry Widdrington, esq., and William Widdrington his son and heir apparent, December 27th, 1658, conveyed Broome-park to Thomas Burrell, with liberty to quarry and take stone in the lands at Bolton, retained by the vendors.² The estate of Broome-park so conveyed represented about a third part of the lordship in value, and in 1663 was rated at £80 per annum, while Bolton, Bolton mill, and Woodhall were rated to Sir Henry Widdrington of Black Heddon at £150 per annum.³

On May 6th, 1697, John Gascoigne⁴ of Parlington, county of York, and Mary his wife, daughter and heiress of Roger Widdrington,⁵ for the sum of £3,110 agreed to convey to William Brown⁶ of Ewart, gent., the manor of Bowton, alias Boulton, with the water corn-mill,⁷ etc., the farmhold called Wood-hall, etc. The purchaser was warranted against all and any disturbance by anyone claiming from the said Roger Widdrington, deceased; or from Sir Henry Widdrington, late of Black Heddon, deceased; William Widdrington and Ralph Widdrington, sons of the said Sir Henry; or Gervase Hamond of Towton, county York, esq., and Katherine his wife.⁸

Nicholas Brown of Bolton, grandson of William Brown, the original purchaser, by his will dated June 24th, 1762, after giving the west side of Branton (burdened with a perpetual rent charge of £200 per annum in favour of his third daughter, Eleanor) to his daughter Margaret, wife of Alexander Collingwood of Unthank, and her heirs male,⁹ gave Bolton to his eldest daughter, Jane Brown, who in the following year became the wife of Matthew Forster of High Brunton.¹ Matthew Forster died in 1790, and Mrs. Forster in 1809, leaving three daughters co-heiresses, amongst whom the estates were apportioned. Brunton was given to the eldest sister, Mrs. William Burrell, Bolton house and West Bolton to the second sister, Miss Dorothy Forster, and East Bolton and the lands at the northern end of the township to the youngest sister, Mrs. Walter Ker.

¹ By a clerical error in the pedigree of Forster of Brunton in vol. ii. of this work, p. 109, Mr. Matthew Forster is stated to be the daughter of William Brown of East Bolton.

At the death of William, fourth duke of Roxburgh, in 1805, the succession to the dukedom and to the Roxburgh estates was contested by Sir James Innes, Mr. Bellenden Ker, and General Walter Ker of Littledean. After a protracted and ruinous suit, and although General Ker obtained a decision in the Scottish courts, Sir James Innes in 1812 obtained the decision of the House of Lords. The defeat left General Ker a ruined man, and he found himself obliged to sell his ancient patrimonial estates of Littledean and Nenthorn, and his wife's estate of East Bolton. The affairs of his sister-in-law, Miss Dorothy Forster, were also so involved that she was compelled in 1820 to sell West Bolton to Mr. William Pawson,¹ and Bolton house to Mr. William Burrell. East Bolton was purchased by General Ker's² son-in-law, Mr. William Gray, barrister-at-law, eldest son of Dr. Gray, bishop of Bristol. East Bolton house, beautifully situated and protected by fine plantations of forest trees, now belongs to Colonel Arthur Gray.

² In 1822 the duke of Northumberland purchased from General Ker 52 acres parcel of East Bolton, in order to extend Hulne Park and to make a better boundary.

The house at Broome-park, surrounded by well laid out grounds, is protected by plantations of forest trees. It contains a good library and also a pair of red deer antlers of great size and development, of twelve or thirteen points, unearthed while draining the field, near Bolton chapel, called the Guards.¹ An iron arrow head was picked up in the vegetable garden in 1888.²

As has been already stated, Broome-park, parcel of the lordship of Bolton, was purchased in 1658 by Thomas Burrell, a scion of the old border family of Burrell of Howtell in Glendale. The original estate of about 470 acres has been augmented by successive purchases from different proprietors in Abberwick and Bolton and now consists of upwards of 2,500 acres.

Besides Bolton chapel the hamlet of Bolton comprises Bolton house, a school-house, and six cottages belonging to Captain W. M. Burrell. There are three door-head inscriptions at Bolton house.

CHANCEL ARCH.

The back door stand for the names B of William Brown, the purchaser of Bolton in 1697, and W M Margaret his wife; the date 1689 is perhaps that of their marriage. The second is over the door of an outhouse 17 . N . B . 32, standing for the name of Nicholas Brown, and has probably been removed from another place; and the third, 1734, is above the door of another outbuilding.

On Jenny Lanthorn's hill, on the farm of Bolton Wood-hall, there is a shepherd's house built like the remains of a square tower. Near it, in a commanding situation, there is an ancient hill fortress or camp.¹

BOLTON CHAPEL.

The chancel arch at Bolton appears to be earlier than the foundation of the hospital, and it may be inferred that the present structure represents the 'capella de Boulton' annexed to the vicarage of Edlingham as early as 1291,² and not the chapel attached to the hospital.¹ Although the present building retains none of its ancient features except this arch, it is entirely in keeping with its site and beautiful surroundings and is well cared for. It occupies the top of a natural mound, the height of which has been raised by the burials of twenty generations around its wall. The chapel possesses a communion cup and plate made in Newcastle in 1730, by Robert Makepeace, and inscribed 'Bolton Chapel, the gift of the Rev. Dr. Eden, prebendary of Durham, 1731.' The parish register of baptisms, marriages, and burials has been always kept with that of the parish church of Edlingham.²

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

On a panel in the church: A chevron ermine between three lions gambes erased (apparently for Brown of Bolton).

In memory of Lewis de Crespigny Buckle, who perished at sea, January 3rd, 1864, aged 18 years, this tablet and a memorial window in Edlingham church were erected by his fellow-passengers and the officers of S.S. Nemesis in affectionate sorrow for his loss.

Aims: (or) a saltire (gules) between four leaves (vert) on a chief (azure) a lion's head erased between two battle-axes (proper), Burrell; impaling (argent) a chevron engrailed (gules) between three estoiles (azure), Reveley. Martha, wife of Thomas Burrell, gent., departed July, 1700.

Mary Ann, daughter of Bryan Burrell, esq., died the 8th October, 1772, aged 7 weeks.

In the chancel are deposited the remains of Bryan Burrell, esq., of Broome-park, who departed this life November the 3rd, Ann. Dom. 1806, aged 78 years. Mary, his wife, and daughter of Henry Partridge, esq., of Methwold in the county of Norfolk, who departed this life July the 12th, Ann. Dom. 1776, aged 28 years. Martha, his sister, who departed this life March the 17th, Ann. Dom. 1806, aged 68 years.

In the vault beneath are deposited the remains of Henry Burrell, esq., M.A., Fellow of University College in Oxford, barrister-at-law, and one of the principal secretaries of the Lord Chancellor Eldon; he was second son of Bryan Burrell, esq., of Broome-park, and died at Lincoln's Inn on the 13th of June, A.D. 1814, in the 38th year of his age.

In memory of William Burrell, esq., of Broome-park, who died Feb. 1st, A.D. 1847, aged 73 years. Also of Eleanor, his wife, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Matthew Forster, esq., of Bolton, who died May 20th, A.D. 1846, aged 75 years.

In memory of Frances Mary, wife of Bryan Burrell, esq., of Broome-park, born July 2nd, 1813, died June 7, 1866. Also of Bryan Burrell, esq., born June 23rd, 1805, died Sept. 5th, 1881, whose remains are deposited in the vault beneath.

Sacred to the memory of the Rev. Matthew Burrell, M.A., vicar of Chatton (second son of the late William Burrell, esq., of Broome-park), by whom the chancel was restored a short time before his death: born 16 Jan., 1811, died 29 March, 1869.

In memory of Bryan Burrell, late major in the 15th (King's) Hussars, in which regiment he served 18 years; born 15th July, 1839, died 20th July, 1889.

² The registers of Edlingham and Bolton, 1658-1812, were printed in 1903 by the Durham and Northumberland Parish Register Society.

Arms: bars-gemcl, on a canton a castle. Mary, wife to George Castles, died January 30th, 1729, aged 70. George Castles of Eslington, husband to the above Mary, died Sept. 5, 1748, aged 94. Robert Castles of Chillingham, brother to the above George, died Nov. 15th, 1754, aged 90 years. (This inscription is repeated on a gravestone on the floor of the nave.)

Arms: Argent, a chevron, vert between three hunting-horns sable (Forster); on an escutcheon of pretence, gules, a chevron ermine between three lions gambes erased (Brown). Sacred to the memory of Matthew Forster, esq., who died Sept. 10, 1790, aged 64 years. Of Jane Forster, widow of the above Matthew Forster, eldest daughter and heiress of Nicholas Brown, esq., of Bolton, who died March 24, 1809, aged 77 years. Of Nicholas Brown Forster, esq., their son, who died April 24, 1791, aged 30 years, and of Thomas Forster, esq., their son, who died Feb. 2, 1795, aged 27 years. This monument is erected as a tribute of deep regret and of tender affection for their venerated parents and beloved brothers by Eleanor Burrell, Dorothy Forster, and Jane Ker, the daughters and only surviving children of the above Matthew and Jane Forster.

To the memory of Winifred Frankland, who died June 13, 1828, aged 28 years, this slab is placed by her disconsolate uncle, John Frankland, esq., of West Branton. Sacred to the memory of the above John Frankland, who died October 21st, 1833, aged 60 years.

To the memory of Eleanor, wife of William Gray of East Bolton, esq., and eldest daughter of Lieut.-General Ker of Littledean, in the county of Roxburgh, who, during her life spent in the faithful discharge of duty, was the source of joy, peace and consolation to others, and after a long illness, borne with christian resignation, died at East Bolton in the 59th year of her age, A.D. 1861. Also to the memory of the above named William Gray, who died June 27, 1872, in the 70th year of his age.

In memory of Lieut.-Colonel William Ker Gray, late 86th regiment Royal Irish Rifles, eldest son of the above William and Eleanor Gray, who died in London, January 10th, 1899. Also of the Rev. Walter Augustus Gray, their second son, rector of Croughton, Northamptonshire, died July 9th, 1901.

In memory of George Craster Lambert, Major-General, late 101st Bengal Fusiliers, died Feb. 9, 1898, aged 72 years.

The Rev. Duncan Lennie, who for 13 years was minister of the Presbyterian Congregation of Glanton, . . . died Dec. 12th, 1858.

In memory of Caterina Petretini Marshall, died at East Bolton, Nov. 2, 1901.¹

In memory of Frances Bayles, beloved wife of William J. Pawson, esq., of Shawdon, who died at Lubeck, 10 Sept., 1854, aged 38 years. The above William J. Pawson died 23 April, 1890, aged 72 years.

In memory of William Hargrave Pawson of Shawdon, late 12th Royal Lancers, who died Jan. 13, 1892, aged 45 years.

Erected to the memory of Amy Anne, wife of Hugh Spencer Stanhope, esq., who died at Glen Allen on the 7th day of November, 1854, in the 52nd year of her age.

To the memory of Mary, widow of the Rev. Robert Trotter of Morpeth, who died 13th May, 1834, aged 84. Alas, my mother! Margareta Maria Trotter, daughter of above, ob. April, 1837 [aged 58 years]. Hannah, her eldest daughter, died 6th March, 1838 [aged 62 years].

(In the chancel.) In the vault beneath are deposited the remains of John Allen Wilkie, esq., of Hetton and Glen Allen in this county, who died Feb. 11, A.D. 1836, aged 66 years.

¹ She was a descendant of Mocenigo, doge of Venice.

THE PARISH OF FELTON.

The parish of Felton has an area of 17,473 acres, divided into nine townships, of which Felton, Acton and Old Felton, Swarland, Elyhaugh, Glantles and Greens and Framlington lie on the north side, and Thirston, Bockenfield and Eshot on the south side of the Coquet. Although it possesses nothing of much importance in architectural remains, for there were never any great feudal or military structures within these limits, almost all the townships provide material for family history, while the old-world village of Felton has its ancient church, its quaint fifteenth century bridge, and its fine park.

FELTON TOWNSHIP.

The township¹ of Felton lies on the north bank of the Coquet, and is about three miles in length from east to west; it contains 1,076 acres and 125 inhabited houses, with a population in 1901 of 491.² The greater part of the population resides in the village of Felton, which has a sunny southern exposure, on the steep banks of the river. Besides the parish church and vicarage the village contains a Wesleyan chapel and a Roman Catholic school, built in 1872, while immediately to the west is the mansion of Felton Park, and adjacent to it a Roman Catholic chapel.

On an allotment of Felton common, near the homestead called Chesterhill, there is a large entrenchment, 615 feet above sea-level, described by Sir David Smith, writing seventy or eighty years ago, as follows:

The view from this camp is extensive. Northward may be seen Bamburgh castle, and southward Tynemouth priory ruins. The camp is much dilapidated, and appears to have had a single vallum and ditch of oval shape, being about 100 paces over all from east to west, and 80 from north to south. The entrance has been on the east side, and some stones are to be seen in the rampire. While ploughing in 1800, within the ditch of the camp, a piece of iron was turned up somewhat like a poker, about a yard long, which possessed a clearness somewhat similar to that of polished steel. There are several foundations within the entrenchment.³

³ Sir David Smith's Collections: Camps and Castles, vol. ii.

The feudal history of the manor and vill is in large measure that of the barony of Mitford, of which it was a member. The story of the distinguished men and families who successively held the castle and barony has been so fully set out by the Rev. John Hodgson in his *History of Northumberland*¹ that only a recapitulation is needed.

William Bertram I., the founder of Brinkburn priory and second lord of Mitford, was father of Roger Bertram I., and grandfather of William Bertram II., who granted to the prior and convent a charter of confirmation, and as an augmentation gave them the church of Felton, a fishery in the Coquet, and common of pasture for themselves and their men in Felton-shire.² In 1196 William Bertram II. made certain payments to the sheriff in respect of Felton and other places in the barony.³ He died three years later, and his son Roger Bertram II., February 28th, 1199/1200, obtained from King John a grant of a market every Monday, and a two days' fair at Michaelmas.⁴ On July 17th, 1203, he obtained the coveted grant that his manor of Felton with the whole parish and with all woods belonging to the manor should thenceforth be disafforested, and outside the regard of the forest, with venison in the woods and all other things now belonging to the forest, quit from the view and exaction of the king's foresters and bailiffs.⁵ This was virtually the establishment of a chase. The Testa de Nevill states that Roger Bertram II. held Felton with its members, which seem to have comprised Little or Old Felton, Acton, Swarland, Overgrass, Glantlees, and Framlington.⁶ The following tenants held of him in socage: Robert de Camb[hou], 38½ acres for 2s.; Hugh de Lanark and Alice, his wife, 12 acres for 12d.; Robert Gardinar, 12 acres for 3s.; Isoud and Aviz the widow, 12 acres, and paid 1 lb. of cummin.⁷

When the magnates of Northumberland, dissatisfied with the rule of King John, put themselves under the protection of Alexander, king of Scots, it was at Felton that they did homage to him on October 22nd, 1215.¹

Roger Bertram III., who succeeded his father in 1244, made an agreement in 1256 with the prior and convent of Brinkburn, respecting common of pasture; the charter mentions the park of Felton, which was enclosed and ditched.² An active promoter of the barons' wars against the Crown, he was taken prisoner at Northampton in 1264,³ and for the payment of his ransom, his debts, etc., was compelled to dismember his estates.⁴ He contrived, either by conveyance before their seizure by the Crown, or by procuring their restoration, to preserve part of them for his family,⁵ the castle of Mitford, etc., passing into the possession of his daughter,⁶

Agnes Bertram,¹ who conveyed it, together with Felton, to Eleanor, queen of England.² The latter gave Mitford and Felton with her kinswoman Alianor de Genouire in free marriage to Alexander de Baliol, lord of Bywell.³

Alexander de Baliol died in 1278, and his widow remarried, before 1281, Robert de Stuteville, who with his wife, in Hilary term, 1281-1282, brought an action against brother Robert de Wotton of Newminster for breaking the free chase of Felton and doing damage to him,⁴ and again, in Hilary term, 1283-1284, he brought a similar action against John de Horbur', parson of Horsley,⁵ and others, whom he charged with carrying away his game as well as breaking the chase.⁶

Edward I. was at Felton, April 29th, 1291,⁷ and again May 29th, 1292.⁸

Robert de Stuteville and Alianor his wife appeared at the Quo Warranto proceedings taken in Newcastle in 1294 and pleaded that their lands and tenements in Felton had formerly belonged to Roger Bertram, and that in them Roger and his ancestors beyond all memory exercised the liberty of free warren and free chase. They produced in court Queen Eleanor's grant to the said Alianor and the heirs of her body. The record states that Robert and Alianor held from Edmund, earl of Lancaster, the manor of Stamford, in the parish of Embleton, until such time as the mills of Felton and Mitford and the great park of Mitford should revert to Alianor or her heirs.⁹

On Thursday, December 20th, 1302, the barons, knights, good men, and whole commonalty of Northumberland met at Felton, in the presence of Walter, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, the treasurer, and entered into an agreement to meet at Wark on the Thursday after Christmas, to make an expedition into Scotland to prevent the Scots from doing harm, and to recover castles if any are besieged.¹

Robert de Stuteville died at Mitford castle, at Whitsuntide, 1306, seised in right of his wife of two parts of the forest of Felton.² His widow died about 1310.³ Their son, John de Stuteville, who was twenty-four years of age at his father's death, sold the castle and manor of Mitford to Aymer or Adomar de Valence, earl of Pembroke, by a charter given in London, February 20th, 1314/5, addressed to all his free tenants and others in Mitford, Molesden and Felton.⁴ Although Felton is not expressly mentioned, there can be no doubt that it was included in the sale, for in the licence to enfeoff, dated February 16th, 1314/5, the premises are stated to comprise the castle and manor of Mitford, the manors of Mulston and Felton, the mills of the latter manor and the reversion of the lands and tenements in Felton, etc., held in dower by Ida, widow of Roger Bertram.⁵

Edward II. was at Felton, June 6th, 1314, and in August, 1322.¹

William de Valence, titular earl of Pembroke, a younger son of the count of Marche and Poitiers by his wife Isabel, widow of King John, received his name from his birthplace, the Cistercian abbey of Valence, a few miles south of Lusignan. He died about 1256, and lies buried in the chapel of St. Edmund at Westminster, under a tomb built by his son Aymer and adorned with enamels, the product of the factory of Limoges. Sir Aymer de Valence,² second earl of Pembroke (named after his great-grandfather Aymer, count of Angoulême), 'the tall pale man' nicknamed 'Joseph the Jew,'³ hated by Scots and English, was present at the siege of Caerlaverock and bore the arms, *barry of ten argent and azure, an orle of martlets gules.*⁴ He was killed, it is related, at a tournament in France, on the day of his third marriage, June 23rd, 1323, and is buried under a beautiful tomb on the north side of the sacrarium at Westminster,⁵ leaving his wife Mary, in her own right countess of St. Paul, in one day maid, wife and widow. The inquisition taken at Newcastle on the 14th September, 1324, presents an appalling picture of the distress which at that time prevailed in Northumberland.⁶ It was stated that he held the manor of Felton with certain tenements in Thrasterston, etc., of the king in chief by the service of one barony and of paying yearly 31s. 4d. cornage at the castle of Newcastle-upon-Tyne at the two feasts of Saint Cuthbert.

There used to be it is stated in the manor of Felton in time of peace a capital message worth 10s. a year, now worth nothing, because burnt by the Scots. There are there 260 acres of land in demesne, each acre worth 6d. yearly in time of peace—sum £6 10s.—now worth nothing because wholly laid waste and uncultivated: 18 acres of meadow each worth yearly in time of peace 12d..

now nothing on account of the poverty of the tenants and default of buyers. There used to be tenants in burgage who held burgages and paid yearly in time of peace 46s., now they only pay altogether 8s. yearly, at Martinmas and Whitsuntide, on account of destruction of the Scots. There used to be other free tenants who paid yearly 4s. 10d., 1 lb. cummin, besides 1½d., in time of peace, now they pay nothing because the tenements which they held are utterly waste and uncultivated. There used to be there five cottages which paid yearly in time of peace 10s., now there is only one paying yearly 6d. at the said terms. There used to be an oven paying yearly 10s., now nothing because it is burnt by the Scots. There is a water mill which used to be worth yearly in time of peace £6 13s. 4d., now only 40s. A forest and park of which the agistment used to be worth yearly in time of peace 66s. 8d., now nothing by default of animals. There used to be three tenants who used to make a paling round the park and keep watch for two nights yearly at the time of the fairs of Mitford, and now they do nothing on account of their poverty. The pleas and perquisites of court worth in time of peace 10s. are now worth nothing.

John de Hastynges, aged 30 years; Joan, whom the earl of Athol married, aged 26 years; and Elizabeth Comyn, sister of the said Joan, aged 16 years, are the kinsfolk and heirs of Aymer.¹

Mary de St. Paul, Sir Aymer's widow, had an assignment of dower November 24th, 1324, the same being made by the Court of the Chancery, because his heirs, John de Hastings, David de Strabolgy and Joan, his wife, and Elizabeth Comyn, could not agree; the lands assigned comprised with other places the manor of Felton, with certain lands in Thirston, of the yearly value of £29 2s. 11½d., together with lands and rents in Ponteland worth £9 18s. 6¼d.² A partition of the estates was made by the Court of Chancery on the 22nd March, 1325/6, when the castle and manor of Mitford, of the yearly value of £29 13s., the manor of Ponteland, and certain lands in Little Eland, etc., of the yearly value of £52 0s. 10¼d., were given to David de Strabolgy, earl of Athol, and Joan his wife, who was sister and one of the co-heirs of the said Aymer, for her purparty.³

But Joan having died before she and her husband were put in possession, and the earl having gone to Gascony on the king's business, it was not until February 8th, 1325/6, that the king's escheator was ordered to deliver Joan's purparty to her husband to hold by the courtesy of England.⁴ David, earl of Athol, died before May 6th, 1330, and was succeeded by his son of the same name. Although the latter had not proved his age before the king, as was customary, he obtained, for his better maintenance in the king's service, a grant of the custody of all the lands and tenements assigned to his parents as his mother's share in co-parceny of the possessions of the earl of Pembroke, deceased, and then in the hands of Isabella de Vesey, to whom they had been granted during his minority.⁵

Elizabeth de Strabolgy, daughter and co-heir, was 7 years of age at the time of her father's inquisition; married, first, Sir Thomas Percy, knight, second son of Henry, first earl of Northumberland, and was living, his widow, 21st May, 1388; married second, Sir John Scrope.

† Philippa de Strabolgy, daughter and co-heir, was 6 years of age at the time of her father's inquisition; married, first, Sir Ralph Percy, knight, third son of Henry, first earl of Northumberland, and second, before 21st May, 1388, John de Halham.

Aymer de Athol, named in an indulgence granted by Bishop Fordham.

Isabella de Athol, daughter and co-heir, married Sir Ralph de Fyne, knight, upon whom and her heir, male the manor and forest of Felton was settled by her father about 1373; died v.p.

Mary de Athol, married Robert de Lile of Woodburn before 16th December, 1373; he succeeded to Felton in 1422.

* This pedigree, which is not exhaustive, but meant only to present the descent of the manor of Felton, is founded on a pedigree printed in Hodgson, Northumberland, pt. ii. vol. ii. pp. 41-43, with details added from Stanley, Memoirs of Westminster, pp. 133-136, and with other additions from documents, etc., quoted in the text.

† She is erroneously called Joan in her father's inquisition, but is correctly named in the inquisition taken after the death of Mary de St. Paul, countess of Pembroke.

Mary de St. Paul, countess of Pembroke, herself of royal lineage, being the great-granddaughter of Henry III., was the founder of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. She died about March 15th, 1376/7. An inquisition taken at Newcastle, May 1st, 1377, found that she held in dower of her late husband, Aymer de Valence, the manor, vill, and forest of Felton, with the reversion, on her death, to Elizabeth, wife of Thomas de Percy, knight, and Philippa, wife of Ralph de Percy, knight, daughters of David de Strabolgy, late earl of Athol, son of David, son of David and Joan his wife, kinswomen and heirs of the said Joan, kinswoman and one of the heirs of Aymer de Valence: Elizabeth was aged fifteen years and upwards, and Philippa fourteen years and upwards.

There is at Felton a manor with a garden called 'le orcherd' worth yearly, clear, 6s. 8d.; 280 acres of demesne land and meadow in the hands of tenants paying yearly £6 13s. 4d.; a small close called 'le Park' worth yearly beyond the enclosing thereof, 3s. 4d.; a forest with 'le fense' worth nothing yearly beyond common of free tenants there; a farm coming from the various burgages called 'le burgh ferme' worth yearly 26s. 8d.; a bakehouse worth yearly, clear, 6s. 8d.; a common forge worth yearly 6d.; a water-mill worth a common (?) pound, paying yearly £4. Free tenants, Henry del Strother, Walter de Swynowe, who hold 40 acres of land by service of keeping the southern bridge of Mitteford, called Fowntebrigg, on the eve and day of the Ascension, at the time of the fairs of Mitteford; a free tenant heir of Nicholas Heron, who holds 20 acres of land by service of paying to Mitteford Castle 2s., and so is of no value in the extent. Perquisites of court are worth yearly 13s. 4d. Free tenants who hold a messuage by service of paying to Mitteford castle yearly 1 lb. of cummin; six cottages worth yearly 6s.¹

The beneficial ownership of Felton having been conveyed by the last earl of Athol to his uncle, the interest of his daughters in the place must have related to the rent reserved, or to feudal rights only. The two ladies obtained a licence, May 21st, 1388, for the partition of their father's estates, and it was agreed that lands in Kent, Wilts and Norfolk should be assigned to Philippa, then wife of John de Halsham, and other estates, including the castle and manor of Mitford, the manor, town, and forest of Felton, etc., to Dame Elizabeth, widow of Sir Thomas Percy.¹

Sir Aymer de Athol died in 1403, and was buried in St. Andrew's church, Newcastle, under a large slab, now robbed of its brasses;² under the provisions of the entail made thirty years before he was succeeded by his son-in-law, Sir Ralph de Eure, knight, the widower of Aymer's daughter Isabel, long since dead without issue male. Sir Ralph died on the Tuesday before March 10th, 1421/2, and his inquisition was taken at Morpeth on the Tuesday before the 17th June following. The history of the connection of the de Valence family with Felton³ is set out in the return to the writ with such precision that at the risk of repetition an abridged translation must be given.

A certain Aymer de Valence, knight, was lately seised of the manor, vill, and forest of Felton, and so seised married a certain Mary and died; after his death the premises descended to David de Strabolgi, late earl of Athell, as his kinsman and heir, viz., son of David Strabolgy, son of Joan, daughter of Joan, sister and co-heir of the said Aymer. The premises were assigned, among other lands, to the said Mary in dower; and the said David granted them by charter shown to the jury, to Aymer Dathell, his uncle, the said Mary, by name of Mary de St. Paul, late countess of Pembroke, then holding them for life. The said Aymer de Athell, knight, by writing shown to the jury, granted the reversion, after the countess's death, of the premises to Arnold Pynknee, clerk, Richard de Tytynsale, clerk, and Thomas de Ingilby, vicar of Bywell church, who by writing shown to the jury granted the reversion to the said Aymer de Athell and Mary his wife, and his heirs male, with remainder to Ralf de Eure and Isabel his wife, daughter of Aymer, and their heirs male; remainder on the death of the said countess, to the heirs male of Isabel; remainder to Robert de Isle, knight, and Mary his wife and their heirs male. On failure of such issue male, a moiety of the premises to remain to the heirs of Ralf and Isabel, and a moiety to the heirs of Robert and Mary; on failure of issue on either side, the whole to remain to those having issue. Further remainders as in the charter shewn to the jury.

² Of the brasses which once adorned the slab, all that remains is one of the knight's feet, which is preserved in the museum of the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries at the Black Gate. About 1895 the Athol chapel suffered from the work of the restorer, the floor was lowered twelve inches, and 'all the remains found, including those of Adam de Athol and his wife, were, it is said, mixed together and buried in one place.' Cf. Arch. Ad. vol. xviii, p. 37, editorial note.

³ Among the free tenants of Felton at this period were Sir Robert de Ogle, knight, who died October 31st, 1409, and Joan his wife, daughter and co-heir of Sir Alan Heton of Chillingham, knight, who by the grant of William de Thymylby, parson of Bothal, and Alexander Bugh, chaplain, were jointly infeoffed of the third part of the manor of Ingram and of certain messuages and lands at Felton, Bamburgh, Wooler, Tynemouth, etc., to hold to them for their joint lives and for the life of the survivor, then to Sir Robert de Ogle, knight, in fee tail. Dame Joan died October 12th, 1416, seised of a messuage in Felton, parcel of the premises so settled, held of Ralph de Eure in burgage, worth paid a year clear. Her heir was her son Robert de Ogle, aged 30 years and upwards. Ing. p. 20, 4 Hen. V. No. 33. The premises in Felton were inherited by Dame Joan from her father. See Ing. p. 20, Alan de Heton, 12 Ric. II. No. 28.

The said Mary, wife of Aymer de Athell, died, and after the countess died, and Aymer entered into the premises. Isabel, wife of Ralf, died without heir male. Aymer continued all his life in seisin of the premises, and died without heir male. Ralph entered the premises and held them in fee tail and died so seised. Mary, wife of Robert Isle, died and thus the premises ought to remain to the said Robert de Isle, knight, and his heirs male.¹

Sir Robert de Lisle was advanced in life when he succeeded to Felton on the death of his brother-in-law in 1422. He was the lineal descendant and representative of William de Insula to whom Walter de Bolbec granted the manors and villis of Matfen, Fenwick, Heddon, Brunton, Thornton and Angerton. The main line, always designated as the De Insulas, or Lisles, of Woodburn, to distinguish them from the cadet line of De Insula, or Lisle, of Chipechase, deserted their original seat at Woodburn in Redesdale at an early period for a more genial climate and residence at Newton-hall, in Bywell, whence they apparently removed to Felton.

Sir Robert Lisle died March 19th, 1425/6, and his inquisition was taken at Newcastle in the August following: he was seised of the manor of Felton, worth yearly, according to the true value, £4, and held of the king in chief by service of half a knight's fee. Thomas Lisle was his kinsman and heir, viz., 'son of John Lisle, son of the said Robert, aged 13 years on the feast of St. Barnabas, the apostle, last past.'²

Thomas Lisle, who succeeded his grandfather, was born at Nafferton, June 11th, 1413, and baptised at Ovingham on the same day, by John Enoteson the parish chaplain, Elizabeth, wife of Roger Fenwick, being godmother. He proved his age at Newcastle, February 1st, 1434/5.³ By a deed made at Newcastle, March 12th, 1450/1, he settled his estates of Newton-hall, Bearl, East Matfen, Thornton, Callerton, Hawkwell, Kirkharle, and Woodburn.⁴ Felton does not occur in the settlement, but on June 2nd, 1472, being at that place, Thomas Lisle, with his son Robert and grandson Humphrey, granted certain lands at Weldon to the prior and convent of Brinkburn.⁵

Thomas Lisle's son, John, having died in his father's lifetime, he was succeeded by his grandson Humphrey,¹ who had already attained the rank of knighthood when he was by name excepted from the general pardon, April 30th, 1509;² he being at that time imprisoned in London for misdemeanours in the late reign. There was an order for his liberation on December 17th following, he being ready to find sureties;³ but three years later, November, 1512, proceedings were directed to be taken against Sir Humphrey Lisle, Robert Cresswell, Sir John Hderton, Roger Fenwick, and others in debt to the Crown.⁴

Sir Humphrey must have satisfied the claim, for he fought and was taken prisoner at the battle of Flodden, September 9th, 1513;⁵ his name appears in the new commission of the peace for Northumberland, issued March 14th, 1515/6,⁶ and he may have been the Humphrey Lisle, who, in 1516, was appointed gentleman usher to the king,⁷ in which year, on July 30th, he died, his son Sir William Lisle, knight, being then thirty years and upwards.⁸

The following undated letter written by Thomas lord Daere, who died in 1525, must refer to this Sir Humphrey Lisle:

To my lordis of the king our soueraigne lordis most honorable Counsaill.

Sir Humphrey Lisle's inquisition, taken at Rothbury, November 17th, 1516, shows that he died seised of the ancient estates of his family at Felton, East Newton, Bearl, Matfen, Hawkwell, Thornton, Buteland, Redesmouth, Broomhope, Woodburn, and South Gosforth.²

Sir William Lisle inherited in the fullest measure the active disposition and unruly temper of his Redesdale ancestors. He must have been already married for some years, for, in 1521, his son Humphrey¹ was indicted with one named Jowsy for the murder of Sir Richard Lighton, a canon of Brinkburn, with whose house the Lisles had a quarrel about that fruitful source of mischief, the tithe corn.² Sir William was rewarded in 1519 for his services in Scotland,³ and in 1523, being then deputy captain of Norham castle, gallantly repelled the attack made on Monday, November 2nd, on that fortress by the duke of Albany, leader of the Scottish forces, aided by 2,000 Frenchmen.⁴

In the summer of 1527, Lisle and his son Humphrey, with about forty followers, attacked the gaol at Newcastle, and having obtained the keys from the gaoler, delivered nine prisoners.⁵ On their way homeward they raided Sir William Ellerker's park at Widdrington, taking twenty horses.⁶ They were seized and placed in ward in the castle at Newcastle, but escaped, and, committing further outrages in concert with the Armstrongs, were indicted at the Northumberland assizes and proclaimed traitors throughout the three marches on August 12th, 1527, when rewards were offered for their apprehension.⁷ The king of Scotland and the earl of Angus were asked to apprehend them, and returned 'good answers,' although nothing came of it. The council therefore caused Sir William Eure to remove from Harbottle to Felton, to which Lisle and his son 'much resort,' with thirty or at least twenty-four horsemen of Berwick and a company of his own at 4d. a day for two months; they were ordered to burn certain houses within the woods at Felton and carry off the corn, hay and victuals, and send to gaol at Newcastle certain women and other simple persons who had acted as spies to the Lisles.⁸ Nicholas Lisle, one of the principal outlaws, was brought before the lord warden and 'is justilit [i.e. executed] accordyng to the kirkes lawys.' The earl of Northumberland held a warden court at Alnwick on Wednesday, January 8th, 1527/8, and beheaded nine men for march treason and hanged five for felony; in consequence 'the country is now in great fear and dread.'¹ Sir William surrendered himself and his son Humphrey, with fifteen other rebels, in their shirts, with halters round their necks, to the earl of Northumberland, warden general of the marches, as he was returning home after mass at Alnwick, on Sunday, January 26th, 1528. Two days later the earl wrote to Wolsey as follows:

After narrating the capture, etc., of sundry Tynedale freebooters, the writer continues: And upon the said conflicte and overthrowe of the said theves spredde a broid in the countrey and alsoo the noyse and spech of the countrey that if the Erle of Angwysse wold not delyver unto me the kyngis rebellious personagis aydett and assisted in Scotland, that I wolde invade Nederdall etc., wher they were keped and destroy and burne all the howses and holdes there, the which amonge the owtelawes aswell of Scotland as of England, by the dredde of the same, as it is supposed, was the occasion that upon Sonday, the xxvith day of this present month of January, came Willm. Lisle, Humfrey Lysle, Willm. Shaftowe and other theire adherentis, in all the nombre of xviii persons, withowte any composicon, covenante or comforth of me or any other to my knowlege, in my way comyng frome the high masse at the parishe chirch at Alnewike in theire lynnon clothes and halters abowte theire nekks, knelynge upon theire kneys in verey humble and lawly maner submytted theire selfis to the kyngis highnes mercy and youre grace, knowledginge theire offencis and requiryng of his highnes mercy and pardon, and if not they were reidy to byde his execucyon of his most dredde lawes. And upon ye same I have takyn theyme and put theyme in save custody to such tyme as I may be advertised of the pleasure of his highnes and of your grace Wryten at my castell of Alnewike the xxviiiith day of January 1528.²

And again on April 2nd:

Notwithstanding my goodwill, but most principally of Almighty God, which as he ever done haith put unto your subjection and obeciens your trayterous rebellions to be justyfiéd according to your lawes by me, your porest and lest experte subject, wherby opynly may apere the great zele that his godhead berith unto youre highnes in all youre gracious affiares. On June 6th, 1528, Humphrey Lisle was examined and made a sworn confession of offences committed by his late father, Sir William Lisle, and by himself, which reads like the tale of a modern Sicilian bandit:

(1) About twelve months ago he and his father, with about 40 persons, Scots and English (of whom all the English have since been put to execution), attacked Newcastle, compelled the keepers of the castle to surrender the keys, and delivered 9 prisoners.

(2) Shortly afterwards they came to Widdrington, intending to slay Sir William Ellerker, and took 20 horses from the fields.

(3) With 140 persons they spoiled and burned Humshaugh.

(4) Attacking Widdrington a second time, they took prisoner and ransomed Michael Vynell.

(5) In returning to Scotland they took prisoners four of lord Northumberland's company.

(6) They burnt three or four houses in Thropell and took three prisoners.

(7) They burnt Lynton, a farmhouse of Sir William Ellerker's, and drove away 43 cattle.

(8) Humphrey himself and four servants burnt the house of Roger Heron in Eshot.

(9) They drove away 60 head of cattle from Togston, 17 from Morwick, 20 from Hauxley, and 60 horses from Over and Nether Buston.

(10) Humphrey and his servant John Ogle, disguised as beggars, met two men of Stamford harnessed on horseback and robbed them of their horses and spears.

(11) He and four servants plundered a house in Wooden of household stuff of the value of 46s. 8d.

(12) He took two horses from Anthony Lylborne.

the position lost by his father, and having already gained his knighthood, procured the restoration of the estates by a grant under the privy seal, dated August 23rd, 1536, for his true and faithful service.¹ He heads the Felton muster roll for 1538 with twenty-nine men.

Sir Humphrey Lisle married Anne, daughter of Ralph, third lord Ogle, by whom he had no issue. He had a natural son whom he called by his own name, and who was father of William Lisle of Barnhill. The exact date of Sir Humphrey's death is unknown, but it occurred before February 20th, 1545/6, when his brother and successor, Robert Lisle, being seised in tail male of the manor of Felton and of five-sixths of the manor of South Gosforth, demised to Sir Humphrey Ratelyf of Elstow, co. ³ This name is no doubt a mistake for Burrell. William Burrell of Felton made his will June 3rd, 1572, and desires to be buried in the church of Felton: he mentions his wife Janet and his children, John and Jane Burrell. Raine, Test. Dunelm.

Swarland, and Thomas Welton of Welton, esquires, the manor of Felton with the demesne lands, park and mill then in his own tenure, and his lands, rents, and services in the vill and territories of Felton, Shotyngley (? Shothaugh), then in the tenures of John Mylne, William Burrell, Humphrey Syngleton, John Anderson, Robert Felton, and Ralph Ogle; and also his lands, rents, and services in his manor or vill of South Gosforth, then in the tenure of William Mylner, George Symson and Thomas Huntley, of the yearly value of £10, to the use of him the said Robert and Anne his wife for life, and afterwards to the use of the right heirs of Robert.¹ In 1552 he was appointed a commissioner for enclosures in the marches,² and died April 25th, 1554, seised of live-sixths of the manor of South Gosforth, the sixth part, together with an annuity of £8, payable out of Felton, being held as her jointure by his sister-in-law, Dame Anne, widow of Sir Humphrey Lisle, knight.³

The manors of Felton and South Gosforth were held of the Crown by knight's service. The former was of the clear yearly value of £23, the latter of £40. The inquisition taken April 28th, 1558, states that Robert Lisle's son and heir, also named Robert, was 'aged six years at Christmas last.' Since Robert's death his widow Anne had the profits of the manor of Felton, except as to Dame Anne's annuity, and also of South Gosforth, subject to Dame Anne's sixth, and to a certain share in the profits and certain payments made to Lancelot and John Lisle, brother of the said Robert Lisle, deceased.⁴

In 1562 the passages between Thistleyhaugh and Newton-on-the-Moor were ordered to be kept nightly with several watches to be supplied from the towns and hamlets, from Felton bridge-end to Cawledge Park 'by west the streyte.' William Johnstone, Thomas Robinson, John Meele, and Robert Browne were appointed setters and searchers, and Robert Lisle one of the overseers of the watch.⁵ Six of Robert Lisle's Felton tenants presented themselves at the muster taken on the Moot-law by Sir John Forster, the lord warden,⁶ March 26th, 1580: and 'Robert Lislie of Felton, esquire' procured a letter from Sir John Forster, written from Alnwick,

Lisle of Acton, gent., the manor of Felton, with his lands of Felton, Elyhaugh, Shothaugh, Catheugh, and the manor of South Gosforth and Coxlodge, to hold to himself for life, and then (subject to his wife Catherine's life interest in the lands, houses, and mills of Felton) to William Lisle his son and heir-apparent in tail male, remainder to Robert Lisle, second son of Robert Lisle, the feoffator, in tail male, remainder to John Lisle, third son of Robert Lisle, the feoffator, in tail male, remainder to the said John Lisle of Acton, brother of Robert Lisle the feoffator, remainder to the said James Lisle of Barneston, remainder successively to John and Robert, brothers of the said James Lisle of Barneston, successive remainders to Ralph Lisle of Felton, gent., to William Lisle of Felton, gent., to William Lisle of Barnhill, gent., to George Lisle of Barnhill, gent., to Humphrey Lisle of Barnhill, gent., and to Lancelot Lisle of Felton.¹

Robert Lisle had licence, May 1st, 1609, to alienate the manor of South Gosforth and Coxlodge,² and died about 1617. His eldest son, William, having died shortly before him, he was succeeded by his second son, Robert, against whom Sir Robert Heath, attorney-general in the Court of Exchequer, brought a suit in 1629 calling in question his title to the manor of Felton, sometime parcel of the premises of Sir William Lisle, knight, attainted.³ The defendant pleaded the Act of Parliament made February 19th, 21 James I., 'whereby it is enacted that the king should not sue any person concerning any manor, lands, etc., by reason of any right accrewed or growne threescore years and more past,' and on April 19th, 1630, obtained a verdict. The following are abstracts of some of the depositions:⁴

Alnwick, September 11th, 1629. John Lisley of Acton, esq., aged about 75, deposed that he knows the defendant Robert Lisley and knew his father Robert Lisley, deceased, the former from his birth about twenty-six years ago, the latter from the age of ten to his death, and has known the manor, town and forest of Felton and the hamlet of Coxlodge, etc., for about sixty years. That Robert Lisley, the defendant's father, did in his lifetime, by indenture dated January 17th, 1595/6, convey the said manor and premises in Felton to his use for life, and after his death the demesne lands, houses and mills of Felton to Katherine his wife for her life, and after their death all the said manor with the premises to the use of William Lisley, his eldest son, and his heirs male, and in default of such issue to the use of the defendant (Robert Lisley) in fee tail with divers other remainders for certain other particular estates in the indenture mentioned. And after the determination of such estates, with limitations to or for the use of the late Queen Elizabeth, her heirs and successors. That the said Robert the father did convey by the said deed the lands in Coxlodge for the use of the said William Lisley, his son and heir, for his life, with remainder to his wife for her life if the said William Lisley by his deed should so appoint in fee tail, with remainder to the use of the said Robert the father for his life, with remainder to the heirs male of the said defendant (Robert Lisley). The last remainder to the use of the late Queen Elizabeth, her heirs and successors. The said indenture was made to one James Lisley of Barneston in the county of Durham and to this deponent. Which things he knows to be true because he was one of the feoffees in trust and privy to the deed. That Katherine, wife of the said Robert Lisley, died about sixteen years since. That the said William Lisley died about twelve years since and was never married and the defendant entered into the premises after the death of his brother William in the lifetime of Robert his father.

At the same place, and on the same day, John Mill of Felton, yeoman, aged about 74 years, deposed that he believes that the late Robert Lisley, the defendant's father, did in his lifetime sufficiently convey the manor and premises in Felton to the uses, intents and purposes mentioned, and that he has seen the deed of conveyance. That Katherine, wife of the late Robert Lisley, died about St. Andrew's day about 16 years ago. That he has heard there was a sale and fine levied by the late Robert Lisley, defendant's father, to William Jackson of Newcastle, of the said manor of Felton and Coxlodge and the other premises, as he has heard by some ill-disposed persons, to the prejudice of his children. That on June 18th, 1614, William Lisley, deceased, son and heir-apparent of Robert Lisley the father, entered into a parcel of ground called the Kirkfield in the name of all the lands in Felton and into the mill of Felton and also into Shothaugh, Elyhaugh and Catheugh after the bargain and sale and fine levied to William Jackson by the said Robert Lisley, esq., the father; and this deponent was present with the other witnesses. That the said William died about twelve years since without issue and was never married. After whose death Robert Lisley the defendant made claim to the manors, lands and hereditaments in Felton, Shothaugh, Elyhaugh, Catheugh and Coxlodge, which, he said, were forfeited to his brother William by virtue of his father's act in passing a fine upon a bargain and sale of the lands to William Jackson. And on August 20th, 1617, the defendant entered into the lands in Felton, Elyhaugh, Shothaugh and Catheugh, and into one parcel of ground in Coxlodge, at all which entries this deponent was present.

At the same place, and on the same day, Edward Lisley of Acton, gentleman, aged about 30 years, deposed that Katherine, wife of the late Robert Lysley, died about twelve years ago, etc., etc.

Amongst other depositions taken, on behalf of the plaintiff, at Alnwick, September, 1629, Robert Hazell[rig] of Swarland, esquire, aged 60 years, deposed that the defendant Robert Lisley held court leet and court baron in the capital messuage of Felton-hall and administered oaths there, as is said. The said courts have sometimes been held at Felton-hall and sometimes at the parish church every year about Easter and Michaelmas. That there were anciently eight freeholders in the said town of Felton: to the best of his knowledge they held their lands as of the manor of Mitford. That Edward Atkinsonne and Edward Stevenonsonne held two several tenements with arable, meads and pasture thereto belonging, and the other freeholders, viz., John Singleton, Mathew Wilkinsonne, Humfrey Andersonne, William Turnor, Robert Thompsonne and John Carr hold their cottages with the appurtenances as of the manor of Mitford. That Shothaugh, Catheugh, the Steades, and Foxholes were anciently part of the forest of Felton, but were taken out thereof by the ancestors of the said defendant Robert Lisley.

At the same place and on the same day, John Lisle of Acton, esquire, aged about 75 years, deposed that the capital messuage (of Felton) is a manor and has in it divers freeholders but no copyholders. To the best of his knowledge the following are freeholders in the said manor: Thomas Thompson, George Nicholsonne, Robert Thomson, John Carr, Jane Turner, John Lisle, John Singleton and Humphrey Andersonne. That anciently the hamlets of Elyhaugh, Shothaugh, Catheugh and the Steades were part of the said forest of Felton and that an encroachment, divided into two closes, has lately been taken out of the said forest and annexed to the hamlet of Bokenfeild by the ancestors of Richard Heron, one of the defendants.

At the same place and on the same day, Thomas Robinson of Eshot, yeoman, aged about 60 years, deposed the same as last deponent (as to the number and names of the freeholders), with the addition of Mathew Wilkinson's name: says that George Nicholson holds a good tenement and has tollage, plough, besides meadow and pasture; that John Lisle holds half a tenement; the rest of the freeholders poor cottages, some with two butts on their back sides, some with one, some with none, and perform one day's work for the said defendant Robert Lisle yearly in harvest time to reap or shear the corn.

At the same place, and on the same day, John Milles of Felton, aged about 64 years, deposed that the said capital messuage (of Felton) is a manor. That Robert Lisle, brother and heir to Sir Humphrey Lisle, entered into all the said Humphrey's lands, viz., the manor, town and forest of Felton, the hamlets of Elchaugh, Shothaugh, Cattheugh and the Steades and Coslodge, and that the capital messuage and demesnes of Felton are worth £30 a year; the hamlet of Elchaugh, 40s.; Shothaugh, 26s. 8d.; Cattheugh, 26s. 8d.; the Steades, 20s.; and that the ancient rent of Coslodge is £16 a year: all which premises, except Coslodge, are come to the hands of the defendant Robert Lisle and are in his possession. That the hamlets of Elyhaughe, Shothaughe, Cattheugh and the Steades were anciently part of the forest of Felton, and that part of the hamlet of Welden, the hamlets of Bywell, Bridgham, Wyntrigg and Foxholes have common of pasture for their cattle in said forest of Felton; and that the ancient metes and bounds of Bokenfeld are now to be discerned by the hedges, ditches and stone walls which do encompass the said hamlet of Bokenfeld by itself; and an encroachment has of late been made in the said forest and annexed to the said hamlet of Bokenfeld by the ancestors of the said Richard Heron.

At the same place and on the same day, Charles Carville of Morpeth, gentleman, aged about 51 years, deposed that as steward to the said Robert Lisle he had kept courts and administered oaths at Felton.¹

A

Robert Lisle of Felton, was sixteen of age at Christmas, 1553 (Ing. p.m. 4 and 5 Ph. and Mary, 6, vol. xii, No. 121); was defendant in a suit in the court of ward- and livery, 21st Oct., 1583 (Cal. Bards Papers, Bain, vol. i, p. 112); made a settlement of Felton and Go-forth, 17th January, 1595 6 (Lambert MS.); had licence, 14 May, 1600, to alienate the manor of South Go-forth, Cowlodge, etc. (Go-forth Papers, Hodgson Collection); died circa 1617 (Exch. Depos.).

Catherine, daughter of Cuthbert Cunnaby of Hilton (Dugdale, Illustration of Northumberland); named in the settlement of 17th January, 1595 6; died about St. Andrew's Day, 1613 (or 1615) (Exch. Depos.).

John Lisle of Acton, upon whom Felton was entailed, 17th January, 1595, on the failure of heir male of his nephew John; had an interest in Felton rectory, 18th May, 1587, as a son of Anne Ellerker, widow (Pat. Rolls, 7, pt. 7 m. 9); was residing at Acton, 31st January, 1589 90, when he purchased a moiety of that vill from Anthony Felton; settled his land in Acton, 18th August, 1629 (Lambert MS.); and died April, 1640; will dated 26th March, 1640; was aged about 75 years in 1629 (Exch. Depos.).

Agnes, daughter of Gregory Ogle of Choppington (Hodgson, MS. 5865, ff. 114-115); will dated 13 Oct., 1601 (Raine, Test. Duncblun.).

William Lisle, son and heir, named in the settlement of 17th January, 1595 6; joined with his father, 1st April, 1602, in mortgage of Go-forth to Robert Brandling of Felling (Go-forth papers, Hodgson Collection); died unmarried, 1617 (Exch. Depos.).

Robert Lisle of Felton, second son, named in the settlement of 17th January, 1595 6, party to Go-forth mortgage, 26th April, 1610; articles before marriage, 1st Nov., 1665 (Mr. Cuthbert Riddell's deed); by his will, dated 4th November, 1657, gave Felton to his wife absolutely; died 8 p.; buried at Felton, 8th June, 1659.

Dorothy, daughter and co-heir of Sir Thomas Howley of Long Howley, knight; she married secondly, 25th Feb., 1650, Capt. Edward Widdington (Hodgson, pt. ii, vol. ii, p. 104).

John Lisle, third son, named in the settlement of 17th Jan., 1595 6.

Edward Lisle of Acton, son and heir, confirmed his marriage settlement, September, 1649 (Lambert MS.); was rated for Acton in 1663; buried 18th May, 1676 (Felton Register).

Mary, daughter of Sir Matthew Forster of Adderton, knight; articles before marriage, 8th August, 1629 (Lambert MS.); died in her husband's lifetime; buried 17th December, 1663 (Felton Register).

Anne, married William Carr of E-hot, had jointure secured on E-hot by deed dated 7th April, 1629; will dated 2nd August, 1681; proved 1684.

Catherine, eldest daughter and co-heir, married Thomas Ogle, and had Old Felton secured to her by deed dated 16th April, 1675 (Lambert MS.).

Lane, daughter and co-heir, married 12th June, 1660, Robert Manner of Long Framlington and Newmoor-house, and had the north side of Acton secured to her by deed dated 9th March, 1660 1 (Lambert MS.).

Dorothy, daughter and co-heir, married John Grey of Howick, and had the south side of Acton secured to her by deed dated 20th March, 1665 6 (Lambert MS.).

The connection, if any, between the Lisles of Woodburn and Chipchase and John de Insula, governor of Carlisle, summoned to Parliament by Edw. I., has not been ascertained (cf. Bank's Baronia Anglica Concentrata, vol. i, pp. 281-292; Nicolai, Report on the Proceedings on the Claim to the Barony of L'Isle, London, 1826).

Other de Insulas are mentioned in Cal. Dec. Sect., Feodanum Prioratus Dunelmensis, etc. Brian de Insula was a distinguished man in the time of King John, and his name appears in the Durham Liber Vitae. The same record contains the names of Otwel, Richard, William, Thomas, and James de Insula (Liber Vitae, pp. 65, 92, 98, 101, 120).

On the death without issue of Robert Lisle of Felton in 1659 Edward Lisle of Acton became the heir male of the family, and on his death without male issue in 1676 the representation passed to Talbot Lisle, grandson of James Lisle of Barmeston, to whom the estates had been limited by the settlement of 1596. The following pedigree is as full as the scanty material will admit, but it is not known whether there is any present representative of this line.

Sir John Conyers, writing from Berwick, August 24th, 1640, to Lord Conway, says, 'the Scots march night and day to be at Newcastle before the king's army, and some say they will seek to cross the Tyne about Hexham, and that they lodge to-night at Felton or a mile or two short of it.'² They lay at Morpeth on the following night.³ Detachments of the opposing armies were again in the district two years later, when Sir Thomas Glemham in January, 1644/5, thought to cut down Felton bridge, but receiving an alarm from the Scottish horse, he was obliged to retreat to Morpeth.⁴ The Lisles seem to have avoided being drawn into the civil war, for their name does not appear in the list of recusants; but in 1645 George Collingwood of Dalden and Eslington, a recusant, alleged that Robert Lesle of Felton owes him £700.⁵ Three years later, June 20th, 1648, Major Saunderson takes credit for a payment, 'when our troops were commanded back from Alnwick, a man met us at Felton with a letter from the governor of Newcastle which required us to stay; we sent back the same messenger and he took post horses at Morpeth upon my score, 5s. 4d.'⁶

Edward Horsley Widdrington, as a Roman Catholic, registered his estate at Quarter Sessions, September 3rd, 1717. He was then residing at Long Horsley. The following is an abstract of the document so far as it relates to Felton:

The manor and lordship of Felton, with royalties appertaining thereto: Felton-hall and the demesne lands at Felton, let to three tenants at £101; Mouldshaugh, £32; Birey-bank, £18; Swinscroft, £11; West Farm, £15; Fence, £33 10s.; Shothaugh, £20; Stephen Closes, £86; water corn-mill, £26 10s.; a quit-rent out of Side-banks paid by Robert Lisle, £5; the North Moor limestone quarry, £5; Doneson house let to three tenants, £1 18s.; house and smith's shop, £2; the borough rent in Felton, £1 6s. 8d.; a close on the lord's waste, 3d.; Felton orchard, £5; a house built on the lord's waste, in possession of Thomas Ogle, gent., 2d.; 'Green-huigh' rent from the freeholders of Newton on the moor, 5s. 2d.; 'Green-huigh' rent out of Overgrass steads, 3s.¹

His mother, the Hon. Elizabeth Widdrington of Horsley, widow, registered a rent charge of £100 issuing out of Felton and Bockenfield.¹

Edward Horsley Widdrington died at Felton Park, December 12th, 1762. He was succeeded by his only daughter, Elizabeth Margaret, wife of Thomas Riddell of Swinburne castle. As Roman Catholics they registered their estate at Felton, March 3rd, 1763, viz.:

A capital messuage called Felton-hall, with the demesne lands, in the possession of the said Thomas Riddell, computed at £133; limestone quarries and colliery at Felton Moor, in the possession of the said Thomas Riddell, computed at £60; Townhead farm, £120; the West farm, £26; a tenement called Swinecroft, £16; Mouldshaugh, £60; Old Fence, £52; the mill, £42; High Shothaugh, £45; Low Shothaugh, £41; High-moor, £100; South High-moor, £42; cottages in Felton lordship, let to divers tenants at £42; quit-rents in Felton lordship, £1 12s. 3d.; pews in an aisle of Felton church, let to several tenants, 5s.; Chester-house farm, £42.²

The pedigree of Riddell has been set out in a former volume of this work.³

In the rebellion of 1715, Thomas Forster lay at Warkworth on Sunday, October 9th, and on the following day marched his men, first to Felton, where their number was augmented by a contingent of seventy horsemen from the borders, and thence to Morpeth.⁵

Robert Henderson, the vicar, John Hudson, Thomas Moody, Robert Nicholson, Thomas Nicholson, William Robinson, Thomas Telford and Robert Thompson, all of Felton, and Joseph Ledgard of Newcastle, voted at the election of a knight of the shire in the room of Thomas Forster in February, 1715/6.⁶ At the election of 1734, John Dennam, James Jewins, Thomas Moody, Thomas Nicholson, John Thompson, Robert Thompson and William Waugh, all residing at Felton, with John Hudson of Wintrig, Richard Robinson of Moldshaugh and Robert Robinson of Acton Dean-house, all voted for freeholds in Felton township.⁷

The duke of Cumberland, marching his troops to Scotland to quell the rebellion, passed through Felton on Tuesday, January 28th, 1745/6, and was prudently regaled by Mr. E. H. Widdrington, then owner of the place.¹

In 1748 William Henderson, clerk, John Donnison, Richard Horn, Thomas Hudson, James Innis, Robert Robinson, John Thompson, Robert Thompson and Henry Wallis, all of Felton; Edward Grey of Old Felton, William Grey of Burgim, Thomas Nicholson of Weldon, Richard and Thomas Robinson, both of Thirston, and Matthew Thompson of Causey-park Hag voted at the election of knights of the shire for freeholds in Felton.

On the 2nd and 3rd May, 1751, there were horse races at Felton, also 'a main of cocks between the gentlemen of the place and the county adjacent,' and an auricula show.²

John Wesley visited Felton on one of his missionary tours in 1766, on his way from Morpeth to Alwick. On Tuesday, May 20th, he writes in his Journal: 'About noon I preached at Felton; there were many hearers, though the wind was extremely sharp, and most of them were attentive, but very few seemed to understand anything of the matter. I preached at Alwick in the evening.'³

At the election of knights of the shire in 1774, the following freeholders voted for tenements and lands in Felton: William Grey, Richard Horn (? Heron), George Lambert, John Nelson, John Pyle, John Thompson, Henry Wallis and Thomas Willis, and Richard Wake, parish clerk, all of Felton; William Grey of Birgham, John Hudson of Bokenfield, James Innes of Crogdon and Matthew Thompson of Paxton-dean. At the great contested election of 1826, Edward Brown, William Gallon, Edward Kennedy, Joseph Nelson, William Nelson and John Tinnmouth, all of Felton; Thomas Gibson of Bedlington, Samuel Gowan of Thirston and Nicholas Telford of Sunderland, co. Durham, voted for freeholds in Felton.

FELTON PARK.

Felton park lies to the west of the village and is bounded on the south by the reaches of the Coquet; it is planted with well grown forest and ornamental trees which protect a house erected in 1732 by Edward Horsley Widdrington, from designs by Canston (?).¹ In a fine eighteenth century walled garden² adjoining there is an extensive collection of old fashioned herbaceous plants. Besides some good family portraits and much valuable old English and French furniture, the house³ contains the numerous gold cups won in the early part of the nineteenth century by Mr. Ralph Riddell's celebrated racehorses, 'Doctor Syntax,' 'XYZ,' and 'Don Carlos.' Felton park with the greater part of the township now belongs to Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, who is lord of the manor.

Connected with the house by a corridor is a Roman Catholic chapel,⁴ built in 1857 in the Gothic style of architecture, from designs of Mr. Gilbert Blount, by Mr. Thomas Riddell, who died April 5th, 1870, and is buried in a vault in the church of which he was the founder. Amongst the church property is a pre-Reformation vestment, stated to have once belonged to the chapel attached to a mansion house of the Riddells in Gateshead, which was set on fire by the mob, January 28th, 1745/6.⁵

 1792 (circa). John Robinson.
 1827. Joseph Orrall, O.S.B., on the cession of Robinson.
 1845. John Swale, O.S.B., on the cession of Orrall; educated at Ampleforth.
 1846. William Brindle, O.S.B., on the cession of Swale; educated at Ampleforth.
 1849. Samuel Day, O.S.B., on the cession of Brindle; educated at Ampleforth. He was uncle to Sir John Charles Day, one of H.M. judges.
 1869. Charles Gregory Smith, O.S.B., on the cession of Day; educated at Ampleforth; the last of the Benedictine Order to serve the mission.
 1883. Monsignor Thomas McAuliffe, D.D. Served successively in the missions in Madras and at Gibraltar. He died at Felton, May 25th, 1884, and is buried there.
 1884. Edward Robert, a native of Belgium, after the death of McAuliffe.
 1884(?) Peter Dorn, a German, on the cession of Robert.
 1886. Adam Wilkinson, on the cession of Dorn; educated at Ushaw College.
 1895. Michael Peter Horgan, on the cession of Wilkinson; educated at Bruges and served a mission in Hondaras.
 1896. Edmund Joseph Barnett, on the cession of Horgan; educated at Ampleforth, at Autun in France, and at Rome.

FELTON COMMON.

The residue of the ancient forest of Felton, which comprised a moor of 1,035 acres, by estimation, lying to the north of the town, remained open and unenclosed until the middle of the eighteenth century,¹ when an Act of Parliament was procured, 26 Geo. II., 'for dividing and inclosing the common called Felton Common, in the parish of Felton, in the county of Northumberland.' After reciting that Edward Horsley Widdrington, esq., was lord of the manor, to whom the minerals were reserved, the Act appoints Alexander Brown of Doxford, Percival Horsley of Cheeseburn Grange, Samuel Marriot of Morpeth, Gilbert Park of Warton, Francis Forster of Felton, and Matthew Sibbit of Shoreswood, North Durham, commissioners to carry the Act into execution. They are to set out roads, public and private, and to appoint common watering places for the use and convenience of all the proprietors, and to make the division amongst those entitled to common of pasture 'in proportion to the yearly value of their respective farmholds, tenements and lands lying within the parish of Felton and township of Newton-on-the-Moor, as the same is stated and ascertained in a certain book there called the Book of Rates.'² The commissioners made their award May 16th, 1754,³ and awarded allotments⁴ to the following persons:

² The following statement, purporting to be a copy of the Book of Rates belonging to the parish of Felton, apparently extracted from the Sessions Records of the year 1711, has been found in the Bell Collection:

The area of the roads and watering places amounted to 29 acres.

FELTON CHURCH.

Although no remains have been found to show that there was a church at that time, it is possible that before the Conquest there was one of wood or stone at Felton, lying midway, as it does, between Warkworth and Rothbury, both of which have possessed churches from an early date.

The church of Felton, with all that belonged to it, was given by William Bertram II., who died about 1199, to God, St. Peter, and the canons of Brinkburn.¹ The grant was confirmed² by Philip of Poitou,³ bishop of Durham from 1197 to 1208, who also attested Godfrey Mauduit's grant to God, St. Mary, and the mother church of Felton, of lands in Eshot, Bockenfield, and Upper Felton, for the soul of Lady Constance, daughter of Walter fitz William, and for the souls of his ancestors and hers.⁴ William Bertram's grant was confirmed by his son Roger Bertram II.,⁵ by King John in 1201,⁶ and subsequently by Henry III.⁷ In an award concerning the chapel near Cawsey Park (de Calceto), made at

THE CHURCH AT THE FOOT OF THE MOUNTAIN

Alnwick at Christmas, 1221, the rights of the mother church of Felton were expressly reserved,¹ and it is probably the place referred to in a chirograph agreement made between Roger Bertram (? the III.) and the prior and convent of Brinkburn, under the style of the free chapel in his manor of Felton.²

By a mandate given at Gateshead in May, 1260, the bishop appropriated the corn tithes of Felton and Acton for the support of the vicar, who was also to enjoy the toft and croft in the vill of Framlington, occupied by the chaplain ministering there.³ About 1268, William, son of William de Blumville, granted lands in Bockenfield for the maintenance of the light of the Blessed Mary of Felton.⁴ The value of the rectory, for the purposes of Pope Nicholas's taxation in 1292, was assessed at £40, that of the vicarage at £6 13s. 4d.⁵ Edward I. when at Felton, January 5th, 1303/4 (St. Edward's day), made an oblation of 7s. in honour of the saint.⁶ In 1312, in the returns to the writ Levari facias, the church of Felton paid £6 13s. 4d.,⁷ and in the following year the vicar was assessed at 6s. 8d. for the tenth granted to the bishop.⁸

The ordination of the vicarage has been preserved. A commission of inquiry dated May 19th, 1313, was made on the petition of Sir William, who is called perpetual vicar of Felton, William de Quickam, dean of Lanchester, and Richard de Morpeth, rector of Greystoke, being appointed commissioners,¹ and the bishop's mandate was issued on December 26th following.²

The church adjoins the grounds of Felton park, and is now almost hidden from view by the many noble trees surrounding it. It is in fitting harmony with its site on the crest of high land rising rapidly from the north bank of the Coquet on one side, and from a ravine formed by the Back-burn on the other. From the churchyard fine glimpses of the undulating country around it are obtained.

The structure is chiefly of two dates, but it has been repeatedly altered and mutilated in recent times. It consists of a chancel and nave with north and south aisles, and a south porch. The earliest work is to be seen in the chancel and nave, the latter having originally been without aisles. Together, they formed a low narrow building, measuring from east to west about 104 feet, and about twenty feet in width. The church was erected about 1200, and must have looked singularly effective on the lofty ridge upon which it stands; the irregularity of the nave and other interior features also giving it a quaint and individual character of which the hand of the nineteenth century restorer has deprived it. The early work may be noticed in the chancel arch, the south doorway now combined with the arcade, and the south wall of the chancel. The semi-round respond at the east end of the north nave arcade is similar to the jambs of the chancel arch, and possibly indicates the presence of a small transept or chapel.

A porch to the south door seems to have been the first addition to the church, the outline of which can be easily traced, and as shown on the plan it reached to the present aisle wall. The north aisle and the portion of the south aisle west of the porch were added early in the fourteenth century, and were quickly followed by the remainder of the south aisle. The unequal width of the arches forming the south arcade is to be accounted for by the fact that the older south door and porch were allowed to remain. The present porch enclosing a previous one was the last medieval addition.

Such is the brief outline of the development of the church, but it is necessary to enumerate some details to illustrate and confirm the same.

The chancel arch is of two chamfered orders, with a chamfered hood-moulding towards the nave, and is carried on semi-round responds having moulded bases on square and chamfered plinths, and capitals, with square hollow chamfered abaci. The details of the south doorway are similar to those of the chancel arch, but they have been much interfered with, only the outer order of the arch and the capitals being ancient. The three windows on the south side of the chancel are lancets with widely splayed jambs on the interior, contracted by shoulders at the springing of the arch, which give to the latter a trefoil form. Probably a priest's door once existed where the modern chancel door now is, as there is no evidence of a window at this point.

The roof line of the original porch may be seen over the early door on the inside of the present south door, and is supported by a chamfered arch rib. The outer door to the first porch (now the inner one of the existing porch) is of two chamfered orders continued to the ground, with a hood-moulding springing from carved terminals. Several courses remain of the diagonal buttresses which originally flanked this door.

The north arcade is divided into five bays with arches of two chamfered orders and chamfered hood-moulding to the nave, carried on octagonal piers with moulded capitals, excepting the eastern respond, which has a square plinth and a round shaft similar to that of the chancel arch. The top course of the respond has been added; it is octagonal in shape, to receive an octagonal capital of similar design to the other capitals on the north side.

The arch of the western bay of the south arcade is carried on a respond at the west side, with a capital and base identical with that of the chancel arch, and on the east side the arch springs from a capital of the same form supported by a bracket. The occurrence of these early features at the west end is difficult to understand; their appearance suggests that of re-used material. The eastern capital agrees in size with that which once existed on the respond at the east end of the north arcade, while the west respond agrees in size with that [which occupied the corresponding position in the north transept or chapel as previously suggested. The details of the two wide bays of the south arcade filling up the space between the original porch and the chancel are the same as those of the north arcade and must have been executed shortly after its erection.

There is a further re-use of old material at the west end of the south aisle wherein are simple lancets, one at the west end and one on the south side now built up. The outline of a large buttress is incorporated in the west aisle wall and can be seen below the west window. The east window of the south aisle has five lights, with geometrical tracery, and is worked in a single large stone 6 feet 6 inches by 4 feet, a very unusual occurrence. This window was probably inserted in 1331, at the instance of Roger Mauduit of Eshot, who, as already shown, was granted a licence to endow a chantry in the church of St. Michael at Felton.

The large buttresses on the north side (see the plan) obscure a door opening, the jamb of which can be traced. The diagonal buttresses on the south side are original, but the remaining ones have been added at various times. The outer porch, of fourteenth century date, is of massive construction, with a stone ceiling supported on chamfered arched ribs, and covered on the exterior with weathered stones: the side benches are of stone, and the door, of a single order with a hollow chamfer continued down the jambs, has a moulded label and carved terminals.

EFFIGY OF PRIEST.

The bowl and shaft of the font is octagonal in form; it has been rechiselled and appears to be of the fourteenth century. In the north wall, at the point marked 'A' on the plan, is a portion of the effigy of a priest holding a chalice. It rests within an arched recess springing from moulded capitals and may also date from the fourteenth century. There is a crocketed niche within the door which once probably served as a stoup for holy water.

In 1759, Thomas Heron of East Thirston provided a sum of money to build a gallery, probably followed by the erection of the ugly north aisle with sash windows. In 1870, the gallery was removed with the assent of Mr. John Heron, as is recorded on a mural brass¹ in the church, and at the same time the church was reseated and the west windows in the nave inserted. This may also be the date of the reconstruction in its present form of the bell turret at the west end of the nave. In 1884, the east end of the chancel was rebuilt. Since the plan was made in 1898 the projecting portion of the north aisle has been rebuilt.

There is a pre-Reformation bell having the inscription AVE . M | RIA . GRACIA . PLENA . and another probably made in 1764. The communion plate is modern and comprises a silver cup made in London in 1842, and a silver paten made in Newcastle by Thomas Watson in 1819; each bears the inscription, 'George and Elizabeth Burdon gave this to the church at Felton, A.D. 1843.' There is also a plated flagon with a similar inscription.²

The vicarage house is beautifully situated on the east of the churchyard, with an extensive prospect to the north, and with gardens and glebe sloping towards the Back-burn, an affluent of the Coquet. It was either built or re-built by Robert Henderson, vicar of Felton from 1683 to 1726, and above the south door has the following inscription: 1683. HAS AEDES POSUIT ROBERTUS HENDERSON: TRINITATIS COLLEGII CANTAB. TEMPORE BARROWNI, TEMPORE NEWTON, SOCIUS: HUIUS ET VICARIAE NON INDIGNUS VICARIUS. PIETATIS ERGO POSUIT HOC PATRI FILIUS TESTIMONIUM, 1758.

The benefice possesses 4 acres of glebe, besides the vicarage gardens, and is of the annual value of £234. It is in the gift of the Lord Chancellor.

Rev. John Hodgson's Collection, 'V,' p. 249.

1604, April 15. Office against William Lisle, etc., that they were traicinge of foxes and hares on Sondraie. Canon Raine's Extracts from Durham Records.

1620, May 15. The waste lands in Felton, lately belonging to the chantry of Felton, were granted to John Gray, gent., and Ambrose Evans, to hold of the king as of the manor of East Greenwich by fealty only in socage paying yearly 8d. Pat. Rolls, 18 James I. pt. i.

1637. Nicholas Rothwell, clerk, brought an action in the Court of Exchequer against Robert Lisle, John Lisle, and Edward Lisle, to recover certain tithes, etc., which, he alleged, were subtracted from the possessions of the vicarage.

1637, October 24. Robert Heslerigge of Swarland, esq., aged about 70 years, deposed that he knew John Ripley all the time he was vicar of Felton; that he knows the manor and lordship of Great Felton and the fields called Kirkfield, Bowmans-haugh, Broomclose, and Riding, parcel of the manor; that he has known five vicars besides the plaintiff, Nicholas Rothwell, who had each of them successively pasture gates for four kine in the grounds of Felton, but does not know whether they had any pasture gates for their horses there; that he knows the ground called Felton Eastfield and two closes lying within the ring-hedges of the said Eastfield, late parcel of a tenement lately belonging to Edward Stephenson, called Stephenson's closes, and has heard that the tithe corn and hay of Eastfield were paid to Mr. Ripley all the time he was vicar by the several occupiers of the ground.

On the same day, Daniel Wallis of Felton, yeoman, aged about 59, deposed that he knows nothing about the tithes, but has heard that the owners and occupiers of the demesne lands of Felton have paid yearly to the vicar of Felton 13s. 4d. He knows the water mill of Felton, the sucken and multure of which do not belong to the vicar as parcel of the vicarage, neither have they ever received the same, or composition for the same, to his knowledge; that neither Robert Lisle nor his tenants at Felton-hall have ever paid oblations and Easter reckonings to the vicar of Felton.

On the same day, Robert Hudson of West Thirston, tailor, aged about 60, deposed that he knows the fields called Kirkfield, Bowmans-haugh, Broomclose, Kilncroft and Riding, but knows not which, or how much of them, belongs to or are included in the said Kirkfield, save that the Kirkfield is the largest of the three quarters belonging to the demesne of the manor of Great Felton. That about 24 years before he was tenant to Mr. Ripley, then vicar of Felton and dwelling in his vicarage house, and he farmed of Mr. Ripley, among other things, pasture gates for four kyne for two years in a certain ground called the Park, being part of the demesne of the manor of Felton, when the said kyne did depasture all the year through, for which kyne grass he paid the vicar yearly 26s. 8d.

On the same day, William Mill of Felton, yeoman, aged about 50, deposed that he knows all the fields named, which are all part of the demesne land of Felton. They have usually been called the Hall-feilds, and sometimes the Kirke-feilds. Six years ago, he being bailiff to Robert Lisle, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff, now vicar of the parish, 13s. 4d. yearly at Michaelmas day in consideration of the tithes and all other customs which the plaintiff could claim as due to him from the said demesne lands. Also, he has heard from his father, who was 80 years old, that no more than 13s. 4d. was due to the vicar for the said tithes, which sum had been tendered and accepted in his father's time. The said sum had been tendered in defendant's time by Mr. Malierye, tenant of the demesne, to the plaintiff, and had been accepted by him. That he knows the Eastfield and the two closes called Middlewood closes or Stevenson's closes. They are not within the ring hedges of Eastfield; has heard that they were always reputed parcel of Acton grounds.

On the same day, William Lisle of Shothaugh, gentleman, aged about 71, deposed that he never knew any cottages, etc., which belonged to the vicarage of Felton except the vicarage or mansion house and such glebe lands as the plaintiff now enjoys in right of the vicarage.

On the same day, John Rushworth of West Thirston, gentleman, aged about 78 years, deposed that tithes for the demesne lands were never paid to the vicars nor composition for the same. Mr. Ripley, who was vicar for about 25 years, yearly had pasture gates for four kine in the demesne fields for part of the time he was vicar there. Knows of no other pasture gates. That the two closes called Stephenson's closes lie within the ring-dykes of Eastfield; that 25 years ago Mr. John Lisle, one of the defendants, took to farm of Mr. Ripley the tithes of the said closes for a term of years, and in consideration thereof promised him that should receive all the 'crismes,' commonly called 'cuddes,' due to John Lisle in right of Felton rectory. About 20 years before, John Ripley, with his servant John Womprey, received the tithes of the said close in kind for one year and carried them to Acklington park, where the said John Ripley then dwelt.

1637, October 24th. John Donkin of Felton, yeoman, aged about 58, deposed that John Lisle and John Salkild are rectors of the rectory of Felton by Letters Patent from Queen Elizabeth, by virtue whereof John Lisle keeps the moiety of all tithes of corn of Old Felton (hay only excepted), and pays the other moiety to John Salkild. That the closes in question have been called Stephenson's closes for 30 years; they are parcel of Acton.

On the same day, John Stevenson of West Chevington, yeoman, aged about 60, deposed that he has heard his father and uncle say that the closes were parcel of Acton grounds and were the inheritance of Mr. Rookesbie. Deponent's father farmed the closes for many years. Exchequer Depositions, Michaelmas, 13 Chas. I. No. 11.

1650. The parish of Felton is a vicaridge, the late king patron. John Dury serveth the cure there, pro tempore, and the value thereof £20. (Framlington) doth belong to the said parish, and it is fit that the said chappell and all such places as belong to Brenkeburne parish on the . . . that Brainshaugh, Newton-on-the-Moor, Hayson and Guison, being a parte of Shilbotle, may be united and added to the said parish. Ecclesiastical Inquest in 1650. Hodgson, Northumberland, pt. iii. vol. iii. p. liii.

1659, April 5. The names of the 24 of this parish of Felton are as followeth: Mr. Robert Lisle, esq.; Mr. Richard Heron, esq.; Mr. Will. Heselrigg, esq.; Mr. Edward Lisle, Acton; Mr. John Lisle, Framlington; Mr. Robert Manners, Mr. Robert Lisle of Weldon; Mr. Robert Lisle of Hason; Capt. Robert Anderson, Robert James, Martin Henderson, Robert Pott, Thomas Nicholson, Richard Cook, Thomas Heron, John Richardson, Thomas Robeson, John Wardell, Robert Perry, John Vickars, John Craw, Will. Wanles, Robert Clenell, John Dobson. Felton Registers.

1661, July 9th. It was agreed then by the 24 . . . that a new surplice be bought and likewise a new font in lieu of it which was broken down by the usurped powers and enemies to our church and religion. That a new common prayer booke be bought. That William Musgrave be clerke and schoolmaster. Felton Registers.

1663. The church is in good repair: the impropiators are Mr. Brandling and Mr. Salkell, valet per annum £100. The vicar, Mr. Greave, is accused for intemperance and neglect. The Ecclesiastical State, etc. Arch. Adl. vol. xvii. p. 253.

1669, March 25th. It is agreed upon by Edward Widdrington, esq., William Carr, esq., William Haselrig, esq., Mr. Matthew Foster, minister, churchwardens and the rest of the parish, that eleven shillings a farme be collected from every farmer within the parish, for the repaire of the great decay of the church, which moneys is immediatly after Easter to be collected by the churchwardens, and by them to be delivered to Rich. Cook, treasurer; as lykewyse the free houses in Felton to pay 2 shillings apiece, to be given to the said treasurer for the use of the church. Felton Registers.

To the right honourable and reverend father in God, John, bishop of Durham, the humble information of the parishioners of Felton: Shewith your honour that Mr. Mark Grieve, our late vicar, did on Sunday the 20th day of September last, preach his farewell sermon to the people:

Wherein at large he positively declared his removal out of the countrey, his purpose and steadfast resolution as to desert and leave the place and cure, so never to officiate againe therein. Nor hath the said Mr. Grieve since that tyme seived the said cure, but left it destitute. All which premised, we whose names are subscribed will be ready to attest upon our oaths, if we be thereunto required: as witnesseth our hands at Felton, the 9th day of June, 1669. Edward Widdrington, Ma. Forster, James Marshall, Tristram Inglis, Andrew Wilson, Robert Urwen.

Bishops Cosins' instructions. Robert Urwin now in Morpeth gaole, is to be examined about Mr. Mark Grieve, vicar of Felton, and if the information prove true, and there be one or two more sufficient witnesses to confirm it, let him be suspended tam ab officio quam a beneficio and reserved to my lord bishops cognizance for deprivation, but if there be but one witness, we must forbear suspension in observance of the apostolic canon Adversus presbyterum, 1 Tim. v. 19, yet public admonition must be used and recorded apud acta, if not at Morpeth yet at Alnwick, because his proper deanery. Hunter MSS. p. 143 quoted. Rev. John Hodgson's Collection. Felton Guard Book.

1669, November 8. 'I have prevailed for the repairing of some [churches] as Felton by name, in the deanery of Alnwick, which was doune body and chauncel, but have now found all new leaded and seated.' Life and Correspondence of Dr. Basire, p. 281.

1680, June 24th It is agreed by the minister and those of the four and twenty then present, with the churchwardens, that a sesse of halfe a crown be laid upon every plough in Felton parish for the paving of the pathie and mending the high waies to prevent the parish from being fined. Felton Reg. 10.

Memorandum tha upon the 18th day of September last, it was agreed by the minister and those of the four and twenty then present with the churchwardens for the year [16]81 that a sesse of sixpence a plough be immediately collected for buying bread and wine for the side communions, and buying other things necessary for the church and for defraying the churchwardens charges att the clergy courts and also for washing the church linnen. Ibid.

1684/5, January 6th. Agreed by the minister and those of the 24 then present that a sesse of twelve pence a farme be laid upon the parishioners for repairing the Xch leads, for setting up the kings arnes and ten commandments in the Xch according to the canon, and for whitening the Xch walls. Ibid.

According to Dr. Basire's paper the impropriation is worth £100 and £50 the stipend. The impropiators were then Mr. Brandling and Mr. Salkeld. The present impropiator is now Mr. Taylor of Chillingham, and Mr. Ward of Morpeth is his lessee. This and the chapelry of Framlington, which is in the same hands, are worth £300 per annum, and I am told it is worth £150 to the lesece and about the same to the impropiator. Mr. John Lisle, late of Elyhaugh in this parish, to be distributed every Christmas, did in his last will in the year 1721, leave 40s. per annum to the poor of this parish. This will was set aside. Archdeacon Thos. Sharp's Minutes.

1759, April 16th. Thomas Heron, of East Thirston, provided a sum of money to build a gallery in the church, the pews in which were to be let to the best bidders and the rents divided by the vicar and four churchwardens on Trinity Monday, amongst poor inhabitants of the parish of Felton who should not be in receipt of poor's relief. Ibid.

1763. The impropriation is at present worth between £300 and £400 per annum. No stipend. The present impropriator is Mr. James Muncaster, who purchased of John Burdon, esq. Robert Haselrigg, esq., of Morpeth, left by will £5 per annum to the poor of this parish, one half to be distributed at Easter and the other at Christmas. Mr. Thomas Heron, of East Thirston, left £30 to build a gallery in Felton church, and the money arising from letting the pews (which at present is £6 17s. 6d. per annum), to be distributed yearly on the Monday after Trinity Sunday for the relief of the laborious poor inhabitants of this parish who receive no sess from this or any other parish. Archdeacon John Sharp's Minutes.

1826, May 31st. Felton. Alexander Davidson, esq., of Swarland, is the impropriator: the impropriation is worth £600 per annum: the vicarage is worth £300, including the Glebe which lets for £130, besides 7 acres usually occupied with the parsonage house which is excellent. The glebe lands are on Coquetside and on Felton Moor where is an onstead. The church yard is fenced by the parish. Some fields on Felton Moor pay corn tithe. The population is 2,000, but there are 50 catholics, and dissenters generally are increasing for want of church room. Service twice with one sermon. The clerk is paid by grants and church dues: there are four churchwards appointed by the parishioners Mr. Thomas Heron, of East Thirston, in 1759 built a gallery to be leased out for the poor: it produces about £5 3s. 1d. The registers begin in 1656; they have two bells, one of them cracked. There is a curious old stone in the pavement near the vestry door.¹ The boundaries between Felton and Warkworth are defined by stones placed in Aeklington Park. Mr. Riddell repairs the south aisle. Archdeacon Singleton's Minute Book.

THE RECTORY OF FELTON.

At the dissolution of Brinkburn priory the rectory of Felton, with the other possessions of the house, came to the Crown and from time to time was granted to farmers for a term of years.² On March 7th, 1578/9, such a lease was granted to Francis Harvey of Cressing Temple in Essex, esquire, for the period of 21 years at a rent of £21 6s. 8d. The lease included the tithes, etc., of New Felton, Thirston, Eshot, the corn tithes of Bockenfield, the tithes of corn and hay of Swarland, Framlington, Nether Framlington, Acton, Old Felton, Glantlees, Overgrass, Firth, Grene, Heugh, 'Casalfeilde,' Shothaugh and Elyhaugh, etc., late in the tenure of Ralph Ellerker, deceased (except the advowson of the vicarage of the parish church of Felton, and certain tithes of lands on the Coquet and the yearly rent of 40s. formerly reserved to the chaplain of Brinkburn). In addition to the rent payable to the Crown, £26 per annum

² Lease was granted, November 28th, 4 Eliz., to Ralph Ellerker, and June 17th, 21 Eliz., to Dorothy Salkeld. Sir David Smith's Collection.

was to be paid for 10 years to Anne Ellerker, daughter of the said Ralph Ellerker, deceased, if she so long shall live.¹ This lease was surrendered November 5th, 1586, and a new one granted May 16th, 1587, which recited that the lease of March 8th, 1578/9, was granted to Harvey for the use of William Ellerker, son of Ralph Ellerker, deceased, and John Lysley, son of Ann Ellerker, widow, late wife of the said Ralph Ellerker; that in consideration of the surrender of the old lease by James Lysley and John Lysley, one moiety of the rectory was let to the said James Lysley for 21 years from Michaelmas last past, at the yearly rent of £10 13s. 4d., and a lease of the other moiety was given from the same date at a similar rent to John Lysley for the term of his life, with remainder to Robert Wrott for his life, and then to John Harvey for his life.²

The rectory of Felton with all the tithes, oblations, etc., arising and yearly renewing in New Felton, Thirston, and Eshot, the grain tithes of Bockenfield, the corn and hay tithes of Swarland, Framlington, Nether Framlington, Acton, Old Felton, Glantlees, Overgrass, the Firth, the 'Grenes,' Hough, 'Casefeild,' Shothaugh, Elyhaugh, and half of the tithes of Shielddykes, and the tithes of Wintrick, 'Coatfield,' Helm on the Hill, 'Lymehurst,' Snook-bank, Weldon-hall, and the Watersides, were granted September 25th, 1609, to Francis Morris and Francis Phillips, to hold at the reserved or fee farm rent of £21 6s. 8d.³ On May 25th, 1610, Morris and Phillips sold to Robert Brandling of Felling. The latter, who was sheriff of Northumberland, 1617, was succeeded in the rectory by the son of his second marriage, Robert Brandling, usually described as of Leathley in Yorkshire, a place he obtained with his wife. Robert Brandling and his nephew Charles Brandling of Alnwick Abbey, October 20th, 1646, conveyed to John Browell of Furnivall's Inn, to make him tenant to the praecipe for a suffering of a recovery, the use thereof being declared to be to the use of the said Robert Brandling.⁴

Mr. Robert Brandling was assessed for a moiety of the rectory in 1663, at £50, and Mr. John Salkeld was assessed at a similar sum for the other moiety.⁵

Robert Brandling died about 1669, leaving four daughters his co-heiresses, one of whom, Anne, wife of Peter Middleton, was dead before August 26th, 1671, without issue. In 1671, Robert Hitch of Leathley, husband of Althea, youngest of Robert Brandling's daughters, purchased from his wife's sisters and their respective husbands, Toby Humphrey and William Cullyford, their undivided two-third shares and took a warranty from them against the heirs of Anne, wife of Peter Middleton, deceased.¹

Apparently, in consequence of the enclosure and division of Bockenfield moor, Henry Hitch was compelled to bring a series of actions in the Court of Exchequer in the years 1691, 1692, 1696, and 1697, to establish his right to the tithes of the lands brought into cultivation. The following succinct abstracts of some of the depositions taken in these suits have local interest.

1691, October 31d. George Forster, of Highmoore, yeoman, aged about 60, deposed that he has known the lands called Longdike greene or Longdike intack about 40 years. They were not ancient enclosures but were enclosed from Bockenfeild moor 14 years ago, of which they were formerly part. Before the said enclosure it was not enjoyed by the owners of Longdike farm more than any other part of the said moor; they only had common of pasture as on all other parts of the said moor. He never heard Longdike intack so called till it was enclosed, has heard it called Longdike greene though it was part of Bockenfeild moore. Every village or steed upon the said moore had a place near them called their green, but to which they had no more right than to the rest of Bockenfeild moore. That Longdike green or intack has been in the possession of the defendant since the enclosure was made: it contains more than 20 acres. The deponent has received for the use of the plaintiff tithes corn in kind from the farms and tenants of Burgham, Bywell, and Pigden's Close, which three places before the division were part of Bockenfeild moore. He knows because he has long lived at High Moor which was formerly part of Bockenfeild moore. Exchequer Depositions, 3 William and Mary, No. 19.

1670, November 11th. Grant to Francis Lord Hawley, Sir Charles Harbord, knight, Sir William Howard, Sir John Talbot, knight, Sir Robert Stewart, knight, and William Harbord, esquire, being Trustees appointed by Act of Parliament for sale of the fee farm rents, of a rent of £24 6s. 8d. for the rectory of Felton, paid by William Carr, esq. Pat. Rolls, 22 Char. II. pt. 2.

1692, October 10th. Robert Heron, of East Thirston, yeoman, aged about 48 years, deposed that he has known High-moor for 34 years. It was enclosed 22 years before. Captain Edward Widdrington, deceased, owner of Felton-hall and Felton demesne, was reputed lord and owner of the manor of Felton, Bockenfeild and Bockenfeild moore. That the division of Bockenfeild moore was made 22 years ago.

On the same day, John Richardson, of East Thirston, yeoman, aged about 48, deposed that he believes that the farmers and tenants of the tithes corn of High Moore have paid to the present vicar of Felton sometimes £15, £16, or £17 per annum for the said tithes. Four years since Henry Clennell, of West Chevington, gent., farmed the said tithes of the present vicar and paid him £15. Witness knows because he has lived at East Thirston from his infancy.

On the same day, William Telford, of Felton, yeoman, aged about 65, deposed that the Fence lying on the north side of the Coquet was formerly common ground. Since the division part of it was allotted to Captain Edward Widdrington for his share. High Moor and Howdens were allotted to Felton, and 40 acres of Bockenfeild moore were allotted to the then vicar of Felton as his share of the common in right of his glebe land. That George Straker has owned the Fence for 6 years.

On the same day, William Morrison of Shottlaugh, yeoman, aged about 60, deposed that he was called as a witness at a trial held nine or ten years since, when John Harrison, then vicar of Felton, brought an action against Captain Widdrington, owner of the High moore, for non-payment of the tithes thereof. A verdict was given for the plaintiff, and the tithes have since been received by the vicar of Felton. The trial was a fair one, with counsell on both sides.

On the same day, John Nicholson of Felton, gentleman, aged about 60, deposed that forty years since he knew Felton forest, and that part thereof called Bockenfeild moore, alia, Felton forest or Felton common, and the said forest on the south side of the river Coquet then bounded on the several lands belonging to Felton, West Thirston, Shottlaugh, Cattheugh, 'Cowdetree,' Longdike, Burgham, Pigden's close and the Bywells, and Bockenfeild, and on the north side of the river on the several lands belonging to Swarland, Felton and Elihaugh. Ever since he can remember, Mr. Robert Lisle and Captain Widdrington, owner of Felton hall and demesne, were reputed lords of the manor of Felton and owners of the soil of Felton forest within the boundaries aforesaid. That part of Felton forest on the north side of Coquet, now called the Fence, was enclosed about 23 years ago and was allotted to Felton hall and Felton demesne and has paid tithes to the vicar for 9 years past (except calf, lamb and wool). The other part of Felton forest on the south side of the river, of which Bockenfeild moore was and is part, was divided about 20 years since and allotted to Captain Widdrington under the name of the High moore: other lands, part of the south side of Felton forest called Howdens, were allotted to the township of Felton. Exchequer Depositions, Michaelmas, 4 William and Mary, No. 45.

1696, April 24th. Humphrey Cook of Swarland, yeoman, aged about 50, deposed that he has known the Fence ever since he can remember: it was enclosed about 24 years since: before then it was a common for the owners of Swarland, Felton hall and Elihaugh. That before the division the owners and farmers of Swarland had a right to depasture their cattle upon the Fence, which they did without interruption from anyone: he has seen the cattle of the tenants or owners of Felton impounded for depasturing in the Fence. That the tithe hay and corn growing on the Fence for the last five years has been yearly worth about £4, and for that time the defendant George Straker has farmed the tithes of the vicar of Felton and has paid the vicar the yearly rent of £4.

On the same day, Anthony Cooke of Swarland, yeoman, aged about 68, deposed that the Fence was enclosed 24 years ago and divided between the owners of Swarland and Felton hall, one half thereof to William Heslirigg of Swarland, esq., and the other half to Edward Widdrington of Felton hall, esq., and has been enjoyed by the said owners and their tenants ever since.

On the same day, John Tullie of Bywells, yeoman, aged about 80, deposed that when the division was made, the Fence was allotted to the owners of Swarland and Felton hall and the High moor was allotted to the owner of Felton and the rest of Bockenfield moore to the owners of the other adjacent villages. That before the division the limits of the then enclosed grounds of the township of Felton were as follows: begins at Felton bridge and so to the Hirpurburn-gate and up Swarland dike to Old Felton, from thence to Acton, and so to Acklington park and up the river again to the bridge.

On the same day, Francis Pyc of Morpeth, gentleman, aged about 73 years, proved his signature to a deed produced bearing date 25th March, 1669, made between Robert Brandling of Leathley, co. York, esq., and Edward Widdrington of Felton, esq. Exchequer Depositions, Trinity, 8 William III. No. 2.

1697, April 16th. John Richardson of East Thirston, yeoman, aged 53 years deposed that for 35 years he had known the places named, and that they were all before the enclosure called by the name of Felton Forest or Felton Common, save that Bockenfield, Thirston, and other villages sometimes called that part of the forest adjacent to their townships respectively by the name of their particular village or township, as Bockenfield Moor, etc. Captain Widdrington and his predecessors, lords of the manor of Felton, have time out of mind been lords of the soil of Felton Forest or Common. Bockenfield and the neighbouring villages had a privilege of inter-common and paid an acknowledgement of 2d., a farm called greenheugh: East and West Thirston being 20 farms, paid 3s. 4d. yearly, and Bockenfield being 15 farms, paid yearly 2s. 6d., and paid suit at the court held for the manor of Felton. The lords of the manor of Felton frequently rode the bounds thereof, and always claimed Bockenfield Moor, the High Moor and the Fence, as parcel of the manor of Felton, and claimed waifs and strays in and upon it. The neighbouring villages had the liberty of casting turfs and cutting whins on the premises. Since the division the neighbouring villages have refused to appear in the lord's court. That it is 26 years since the division of Felton Forest. No corn grew there but it was all moorish ground. On the division, High Moor and the Fence were made parcels of the township of Felton. That part of Felton Forest allotted to Bockenfield has ever since been enjoyed as parcel of Bockenfield. That the defendant, Robert Henderson, ever since he became vicar about 14 years ago, and Mr. Harrison his predecessor, ever since the latter recovered them against Captain Widdrington about 15 years since, have received tithes of corn and hay growing in Felton township and the High Moor and Fence and all other tithes except calf, lamb, wool, and bees. This he knows as he has all along lived at East Thirston and once lent his draught to lead the said tithes to Mr. Clennel, then farmer thereof.

On the same day, Robert Heron of East Thirston, yeoman, aged 57 years, deposed

On the same day, Henry Clennell of Abbschalles, gentleman, aged 64 years, deposed that on the 14th June, 1683, he saw Robert Henderson inducted to the vicarage of Felton, which, so far as he remembers, has always been accounted a vicarage endowed with glebe lands.

On the same day, William Archbold, of Alwrick, gentleman, aged 77, deposed that about 26 or 27 years ago Felton Forest was divided, and he was one of the Commissioners appointed for the division: Captain Edward Widdrington had set off to him about 100 acres for his royalty as lord of the soil: the rest of it was allotted according to the ancient rent of the Book of Rates among the owners of Felton, East and West Thirston, Bockenfield, and the other adjacent villages: before the division it was moorish ground and grew no corn.

On the same day, William Wilson, of Long Framlington, gentleman, aged 71 years, deposed that he has known the parish for 60 years. That the several enclosures named were parts of Felton Forest which extended north and south of the Coquet. Mr. Robert Lisle and Capt. Widdrington after him were lords of the manor of Felton and of the soil of Felton Forest, and before the division sunk pits within the bounders thereof, and as lords of the soil made two intacks at Long Dykes. Mr. Lisle left these intacks to his servant, one Wallas, who, or those claiming under him, has ever since enjoyed the same without interruption, and this he knows as he was servant to Mr. Lisle when the intacks were made. Exchequer Depositions, Trinity, 9 William III. No. 3.

Wearied by these suits, Henry Hitch, with Alatheia, his wife, and Henry Hitch, their eldest son, November 5th, 1700, in consideration of the sum of £2,700, paid or secured to be paid, conveyed to John Taylor of the city of London, the rectory and church of Felton, with all the tithes or oblations of the towns of Felton, Long Framlington, Low Framlington, 'Toddles,' Newmoor house, Snukebank, Glantlees, Shields (Shielddykes), Weldon and the Watersides, Catheugh, Greens, Acton, Overgrass, Swarland, Long-row, 'Barnshawhill,' 'Smaden,' Elyhaugh, Shothaugh, East Thirston, West Thirston, Eshot, Helm-on-the-hill, Longdike, Bockenfield, Burgham, Bywell, Wintrick, Millheugh, Eshot-hengeh, Fence, Firth, Hott, and Loaning-end, and also (the deed declares) the advowson and right of presentation to the vicarage. It was covenanted that Hitch should levy a fine, which he did in Hilary term, 12 William III. Subsequently by a deed made July 1st, 1702, John Taylor declared that, in the purchase-deed set out, his name was used in trust for William Taylor of Chillingham, whose was the £2,700 paid to Hitch as consideration for the rectory.¹

By his will dated April 6th, 1706, William Taylor gave the rectory to his son William Taylor and the heirs of his body, with remainder to his (the testator's) brother John Taylor in tail male, with divers remainders, subject, however, to the payment of £1,000 for the discharge of testator's debts, which included the sum of £700 due to the executors of Patricius Crow of Ashington, esquire, deceased.²

William Taylor,³ the son, and his mother Phillis Taylor, on March 25th, 1724, mortgaged the rectory to Henry Rawling to secure £2,500: further charges were subsequently made, and on December 15th, 1743, Taylor⁴ and his mortgagees in consideration of £7,800, paid by Nicholas Burdon, conveyed the rectory to the latter's son, John Burdon.⁵

⁵ Mr. John Tate's Abstract of Title of Felton tithes.

On November 12th, 1753, John Burdon of Cleadon, in consideration of the sum of £10,500, sold the rectory of Felton, a house and garth at West Thirston, then in the occupation of John Sabron, a tenement and closes of land in Long Framlington, late in the occupation of Roger Crawford, yeoman, deceased, and two other closes in Long Framlington, called Moorlands, sometime exchanged for other lands by John Challoner of Morpeth, surgeon, with John Embleton of Long Framlington, to James Muncaster of Newcastle. James Muncaster, then of Wallsend, by indenture dated September 17th, 1767, settled it upon his marriage with Elizabeth Dale of Howden Pans, spinster, to secure a jointure of £300 a year.¹

About 1791,² Muncaster prepared to dismember the rectory and to sell parcels of the tithes to the landowners on whose lands they were charged. Before doing so, he secured by a deed dated October 20th, 1791, the fee farm rent of £21 6s. 8d. on the tithes payable out of the duke of Northumberland's lands in East and West Thirston, and provided for the incidence of repairs of the chancels of Felton and Long Framlington.

The tithes undisposed of by private contract were exposed for sale by auction March 13th, 1798,³ but failed to find a purchaser at that time, and James Muncaster⁴ died shortly afterwards, leaving his widow his sole executrix, who on May 28th, 1805, being then resident at Coldrington house near Cardiff, entered into articles of agreement with Alexander Davison of Swarland, who agreed to purchase for £15,700. The conveyance is dated August 2nd, 1805.⁵ Since that time the rectorial tithes have been very largely purchased by the different landowners in the parish and merged in the freeholds.

⁴ 1776, 31st October. Will of James Muncaster. To my nephew, James Muncaster Atkinson, £1000; to my niece, Isabel Atkinson, £1000 over and above what she may become entitled to under a deed of gift made by my late mother, the said legacies to be paid to my brother-in-law, Charles Atkinson, and placed out at interest for the benefit of his said children until they attain the age of 21 or marry; to my niece, Isabel Ward, £2000 over and above what she may become entitled to under a deed of gift made by my late mother; to Miss Shepherd of Howden Pans, £100; to each of my servants who shall be living with me in my house at Wallsend, £50; to Hugh Moises of Newcastle, clerk, £1000 in trust to pay the same to the treasurer of Newcastle Infirmary; I give the rectory of Felton and all other my freehold estate to my wife and her heirs for ever. By a codicil dated July 8th, 1791, the testator revoked the legacies given by his will to his nephew, James Muncaster Atkinson, to his niece, Isabel Atkinson (then wife of Shafto Craster, esq.), and to his servants. The testator gave £1000 to his sister, Frances Atkinson, and to his said nephew and niece £500 apiece.

THIRSTON TOWNSHIP.

The township of Thirston, comprising East Thirston, West Thirston and Shothaugh—each formerly a township in itself¹ has an area of 2,025 acres. The hamlet of West Thirston lies on the right bank of the river Coquet, immediately south of and opposite to the village of Felton. In 1901² there was a population of 216.

The hamlet of East Thirston comprises two farms—the one belonging to the duke of Northumberland and the other to Mrs. Charles Thorp—with eight or nine houses and cottages. Close by is the manorial mill, originally built by the seventh earl of Northumberland³ (1557-1572), with its grey stone walls and hipped roofs covered with red pantiles, situated in a rich pasture by the side of the Thirston burn.

The hamlet or village of West Thirston, forms, as it were, a southern suburb of the village of Felton, having a chapel⁴ and manse of the Presbyterian church in England, the National schools, and between thirty and forty houses and cottages. Thirston house, a modern structure of dressed freestone, has recently been sold by Mr. T. W. Smith to Mr. Edward Newton of Newcastle.

On the farm called East Thirston Moor, near the Berwick and Newcastle road, there is a camp. Sir David Smith, writing about eighty years ago, says :

Thirston camp is now ploughed down and to be traced with difficulty, as the aggers have been levelled and the ditches filled up, but in the memory of man was very distinct; of circular shape and about seventy-five paces diameter. It lies south-west of the farmhouse in flat ground, but no eminence sufficiently near to command it. When East Thirston moor, upon which the camp is, was improved, a stone gate-post was dug up near to it, but there is no tradition of the land having ever been enclosed before, for agricultural purposes, and therefore they conclude that the gate-post had some reference to the camp, near to which some small foundations were also found and the marks of fire; but these may have been remains of a herd's house, when the moor was in common.

³ Survey of 1585. See post, p. 310.

⁴ The foundation stone of the chapel was laid September 7th, 1819, by Mr. Alexander Davison of Swarland, who gave the site and a donation to the building fund.

The succession of ministers of the Presbyterian church in Thirston is as follows: 1810, Alexander Hoy, educated at Homerton College, London; 1860, Thomas Curry, educated at the Presbyterian Church Theological Hall, London, and ordained colleague and successor to Mr. Hoy in 1867; 1873, Alexander Scott, of Glasgow University, on the cession of Curry; 1880, James Lemon, of Edinburgh University, on the cession of Scott. Ex inf. Rev. James Lemon.

Two stone 'tomahawks,' supposed to be British, were found within the precincts of this camp (which has given its name to the field in which it stands), the one in 1797 and the other in 1869. The smaller one is of the pure silicious kind, being a yellowish brown flint and weighing 2 oz. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ dr. nearly; manufactured like the small arrow heads, which the country people call 'elf-shots'; the other has a smooth bluish-grey cast and is differently made from the small one, it weighs 7 oz. 0 $\frac{3}{4}$ dr. nearly, both avoirdupois. They are the kind of instruments which the American Indians used for axes, before iron was introduced among them by Europeans, are now in possession of the Northumberland family, and have been a great inducement to me to record the situation of this camp. With one of the axes a knife was found with a handle made of a stone, like the Coquet pebbles, but broken in half. Other curious fossils have been found in the vicinity of the camp.¹

The smaller axe described by Sir David Smith is three inches long and two inches and a half broad at the cutting edge. The larger one is four inches and a half long. They are preserved in the museum at Alnwick Castle and are figured in the Catalogue of Antiquities at Alnwick Castle.²

A member of the barony of Mitford, Thirston remained in the hands of the lords of that fee³ until about 1262, when it was granted by Roger Bertram during the shrievalty of Adam de Jesmond⁴ to his (Roger's) granddaughter Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas fitz William, lord of Emley. He grants to Agnes, her heirs and assigns, all his lands in the vill, the culture called Watering, with the land and meadow between Frithocheles and the Coquet, and the brewhouse rights, and to her tenants that they shall be free of payment for the pannage of pigs, for nuts (nut-penny) and for hens (rent-hens). Neither Agnes nor her tenants were to be molested about the grantor's forests unless they shall be taken ad stob et stozyn. She and her heirs were to be permitted to run with dogs and greyhounds over the free warren within the boundaries of the vill. The tenants were to have estovers on the south side of the Coquet for house bote and hay bote, to build, enclose and burn, and for all other necessary purposes, by licence and at sight of Bertram's foresters, paying 6d. yearly at Michaelmas for castle-ward at Mitford. The tenants were to grind at the lord's mill at Felton, yielding the thirteenth part for multure; they were to repair the mill dam, and also the fence of the lord's great park at Mitford as they had been accustomed to do, and to render foreign service of the king. But Agnes was to be permitted to grind the produce of her culture of Watering without paying multure, and was to be free of any aid for making the king's eldest son a knight or marrying his eldest daughter.¹

While the manor was still in the hands of the Bertrams and of Agnes fitz William, several small parcels and plots of land were granted to the abbot and convent of Newminster and the prior and convent of Brinkburn. To the former house Roger Bertram granted a moor near the Chyuerig in Thresterston field, and by a charter dated March 28th, 1250, confirmed the grant.¹ By a charter, not later than 1201, Richard (or Robert), son of Roceline de Thrasterston, granted to the prior and canons of Brinkburn seven acres in the field of Thrasterston, and a toft near the bridge formerly held by Richard the chaplain, a house and croft held by Robert, son of Gilbert, etc.,² the grant being confirmed by Richard's son William,³ and subsequently in 1202 by the king.⁴ William Puffin, son of Helyas of Greteham, gave, for the maintenance of the light before the altar of the Holy Cross at Brinkburn, a toft and croft, formerly held by Guy the forester, which he held by grant of Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas fitz William of Wodhalle.⁵ By another charter the same William Puffyn granted the twelve acres in Thrasterston, which he had acquired from Adam Manfetur, for the maintenance of the light of the Blessed Mary in Brinkburn church, viz., one acre in Mikeledayle, one acre in Langelandes, half an acre in the Leys, and another half-acre in the same culture, an acre in de praedicta cultura quae vocatur Watering' ad molendinum meum de Felton' quiete et solute de multura. Et insimul concedo pro me et heredibus meis dictae Agneti scilicet quod praedicta Agnes et heredes sui vel assignati et sui tenentes de praedicta villa de Trastereston' quieti sint de auxilio ad primogenitum filium meum et heredum meorum militem faciendum et ad primogenitam filiam meam maritandam imperpetuum. Ego vero Rogerus et heredes mei praedictae Agneti et heredibus suis vel assignatis praedictam villam et terram de Trastereston' cum omnibus pertinentiis suis prout plenius supra dictum est contra omnes homines tam Judeos quam Christianos warrantizabimus acquietabimus et defendemus imperpetuum. Et ut haec mea donacio concessio et praesentis cartae meae confirmacio perpetuae stabilitatis robur optineat, praesentem cartam appositione sigilli mei roboravi. Hugh Vigerus, son of Gilbert de Kreclawe (Kirkley), with the consent of Agnes his wife, for their souls and for the souls of his ancestors and successors, granted to the prior and canons a toft and croft with two acres of land which he had acquired from Adam Maufetur. The toft and croft were situated between lands already held by the prior, and a toft belonging to the said Adam, formerly held by Robert Coverrec, the two acres, with their pertinents, were situated on the west side of the loning, between the lands of Baldwyn, formerly the grieve, and the lands of Adam, formerly servant of Ralph de Bray.⁶

In 1274, the Lady Agnes granted to William de Felton, cissor, and to those to whom he might assign, except the chief lords of the fee, clergy or Jews, a lease for twenty years of a piece of arable land in Waterrig, with the meadow which Wiot sometime held. The lease was attested by Sir John de Halton seneschal of Sir Alexander de Baliol, Sir Roger Mauduit, Henry the vicar of Felton, Richard de Acton, William, son of Coc., Adam Maufetur, etc. By a subsequent deed, Agnes granted the premises to the said William in fee.¹

She also granted to Henry, son of Adam Hiring, for his life a parcel of land with a toft and croft which Arnesius del Grene once held, paying to Agnes and her heirs 14s., at two terms of the year, viz., a moiety at the feast of St. Cuthbert in Lent and a moiety at the feast of St. Cuthbert in September; he was to bear his share of foreign service due to the king, to do suit at the mill of Felton, yielding the thirteenth measure, to aid in the repair of the mill dam and of the great hedge of the lord's park at Mitford.²

In 1329, Robert, son of Alexander de la Chambre of Newcastle, had a pardon for the death of Robert Knyght of Thrastereston.¹

At this period there was a protracted dispute about Thirston, between the heirs of Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke, lord of Felton, and Henry de Percy, and pending a decision the place was taken into the hands of the Crown by the escheator.² In the inquisition³ taken at Newcastle, September 14th, 1324, after the death of the earl it was stated that he had died seised of the manor of Felton and of twelve bondlands in Thirston, each containing twenty-four acres of land, which in times of peace used to pay 12s., but were at that time lying waste and uncultivated, having been destroyed by the Scots.⁴ Subsequently, the escheator held a new inquisition at Newcastle, on August 21st, 1331, when it was found that Aymer de Valence was not seised of the lands in question at the time of his death.⁵ The holdings were apparently lying in a derelict condition, 'because they lay utterly waste and uncultivated through the poverty of the neighbourhood destroyed by the Scots and lack of tenants and animals.'⁶

In February, 1333/4, Richard de Acton of Newcastle, by an indenture made at York on the Saturday after the feast of the Purification (February 2nd), granted the manor of Whittington, in the parish of Corbridge, and 220½ acres of land in Thrasterton to Hugh de Karliolo and John de Stanyngton, chaplains, in trust that they would regrant the same to him, to hold for the term of his life and then to the use of Nicholas de Acton, son of the said Richard, and to Alice, daughter of Thomas de Karliolo of Newcastle, in tail male, with remainder to Matilda, daughter of Richard de Emeldon and the heirs of her body, begotten by Richard de Acton, another son of the said Richard, with remainder to the right heirs of Richard.⁷ In the same year, on September 24th, Henry de Percy had licence to enfeoff John de Crayk, parson of Spollorth, with the castles of Alnwick and Warkworth and other estates, comprising the reversion of a moiety of the town of Thrasterston, at that time in the

In the inquisition taken after the death of Henry de Percy, who died May 18th, 1368, it is stated that he died seised of the manor of Thrasterston, held of the barony of Mitford by the service of 6d. at Michaelmas. There were 21½ (sic) acres of land in demesne, each acre worth yearly 4d., the sum 10s. 6d. (sic). Eighteen bond-holdings, of which fourteen were in the hands of tenants at will, paid each 6s. 8d. yearly at Whitsuntide and Michaelmas, and four were uncultivated and paid yearly 2s. in herbage, the sum £4 15s. 4d. (sic). Three cottars paid yearly 3s. Plots of herbage and several pastures, called Stirkeshlee, Waterbukkes and Lez Sounez, paid yearly 3s. 4d. Free tenants paid yearly 12s. 11½d. A rent of hens and nuts, worth in common years 2s. 2d., was payable at Christmas. The perquisites of court and halmote were worth 3s. a year.³

Nicholas and Alice de Acton died without issue, and under the settlement of 1334, Matilda, or Maud, de Emeldon, wife, first of Richard de Acton, and afterwards of Sir Alexander de Hilton, succeeded. In an inquisition taken at Morpeth on the Wednesday before October 28th, 1369, it is stated that she died September 8th, 1369, seised of seven husbandlands and two cottages in Thrasterston in the hands of tenants at will, each of whom paid yearly 35s. at Whitsuntide and Martinmas; they were held of Lord Henry de Percy, by the service of 14½d. at the feast of St. Cuthbert in September. 'John de Woderington, knight, son and heir of Elizabeth, daughter and heir of the said Maud, is her heir, aged twenty-two years and more.'⁴ This Sir John Widdrington appears to have died in his father's lifetime, for his father, Roger Widdrington, had subsequently another 'son and heir' named John Widdrington, who was not born until 1371. The latter John Widdrington must have been the issue of Roger Widdrington's second marriage with a certain Agnes,¹ for the Emeldon and Acton lands in Thirston, Jesmond and elsewhere did not descend through John de Widdrington's issue, but through the issue of Christian, wife of Sir Bertram Monboucher of Horton castle, daughter of Roger de Widdrington by his first wife Elizabeth Acton.² Sir Bertram Monboucher died on the Wednesday after August 1st, 1388, seised in right of his wife of two husbandlands in Thristerston, and of a sixth part of the vill of Wooden.³ Besides a son Bertram, Sir Bertram Monboucher had a daughter, Isabel, wife first of Sir Henry Heton, knight, and secondly of Robert Harbottle, who ultimately, about 1425, became the heiress of the Monboucher estates, on the death of her grandnephew, Bertram Monboucher, without issue.⁴

Sir Ralph Harbottle, great-grandson of the above mentioned Robert and Isabella, married Margaret, daughter of Sir Ralph Percy, and granted Threston and 'Troddington,' 1486-1487, to his brother Anthony Harbottle and his wife Joan, for the term of their lives.⁵ The Harbottle estates ultimately descended to Sir Ralph Harbottle's two grand-daughters, Eleanor, widow of Sir Thomas Percy, and her sister Mary, wife of Sir Edward Fitton,⁶ who by deed dated November 3rd, 1538, made arrangements for a partition,⁷ in which the Harbottle lands at Thirston appear to have fallen to Dame Eleanor Percy.

Sir John de Felton of Edlingham, who died on Friday, March 31st, 1396, was at the time of his death seised of lands and tenements in Threstirston, of the yearly value of 40s., held of John del Scrop and Elizabeth his wife, in her right as of the barony of Mitford, paying by the year 18d. for all services.¹ His son, John Felton, died under age, seised of the said lands, and was succeeded by his sister Elizabeth, wife of Sir Edmund Hastings, knight.

Sir John de Felton's widow, Elizabeth (who remarried Sir Henry Boynton), with other lands, held in dower of Henry Percy of Athol, as of his barony of Mitford, by the service of a peppercorn at Whitsuntide,² a third part of a messuage in Thresterton, the whole messuage being worth 12d. beyond reprises, a third part of three oxgangs, each worth 16d. yearly, and a third part of ten acres of meadow worth 2d. an acre. These lands were included in the settlement made by Sir Edmund Hastings, knight, January 14th, 1444/5.³

Henry, the second earl of Northumberland, when he was slain at the battle of St. Albans, May 22nd, 1455, was seised of the manor of Thrasterston, held of the barony of Mitford, by the service of 6d. at Michaelmas. An inquisition was taken at Newcastle, October 29th, 1455, when the extent of the manor, as set out, was almost identical with that in the inquisition taken in 1368, after the death of Henry de Percy 'le pier,' except that instead of three cottars there were now four.⁴

Henry, the third earl of Northumberland, also fell in battle for the house of Lancaster, being slain at Towton Moor, March 29th, 1461. His baronies and estates were forfeited to the Crown by Act of Parliament, November 4th, 1461, and were granted on August 10th, 1462, by letters patent, in which Thristerton is mentioned by name, to Edward IV.'s brother George, duke of Clarence.⁵ This grant seems to have been resumed, for, August 1st, 1464, the castles of Warkworth and Alwick, the manor of Thristerton, the forest of Rymseyde, etc., were granted to John Nevill, lord Montagu, who had been created earl of Northumberland.⁶ This grant was also resumed,⁷ and the forfeited estates were regranted to Sir Henry Percy in 1470.⁸

At Michaelmas, 1562, George Metcalf, the earl's receiver, accounted for £10 13s. 11½d., received from Thomas Tyndale, the bailiff of Thirston, for the issues of his office for the preceding year.²

About the year 1567 a very full survey of the manor was made for Thomas, seventh earl of Northumberland, by George Clarkson, who after describing the way in which it was held, the augmentation of the lord's patrimonial estate by his mother's inheritance, and the amenities and situation of the place, gives the proportions held by the earl, his mother, Lady Eleanor Percy, and the free tenants respectively. The earl held the eighteen husbandlands or tenements possessed by his ancestors in 1368 and 1455, the Lady Eleanor possessed the seven husbandlands of which her ancestress Maud de Hilton died seised in 1369, the queen held a tenement with divers cottages and lands formerly belonging to the prior and convent of Brinkburn, Robert Beadnell held in Old (or West) Thirston one husbandland, and in New (or East) Thirston another husbandland, James Strangeways held two husbandlands, and Robert Felton held a tenement which, in whole or in part, may possibly represent the land held by Sir John de Felton in 1396 and Sir Edmund Hastings in 1445. The vicar of Felton held a parcel of glebe land, and six selions were held by Thomas Rokeby.

The manor and townshippe off Thyrstone was some tymes parcell of the baronye of Mytforde, and holden of the same by my lord's auncestors, but beyng com into the prince's handes at dyvers tymes, and from thence gyven and restored to my lord's auncestors, the tenor is altered and now my lord holdeth it by his last restytucion amongst all his other lands by [blank in MS.] as apperith by his letters patent, and yet nevertheles it payeth cornage with the lordshipp of Mytforde, but all such as have land there do hold the same of my lorde as herafter doth appeare.

My lord over and besyd his auneyaunt inheritance in the said towne hath certaine land and tenements there of the possessions of Sr. Raif Harbottell, knt., his greate graundefather which he is inheritable unto by the Right Honorable Ladye Dame Elynor Percye, his mother, and by the said Dame E[li]anor, the said lands amongst others are gyven to my lorde and his heyres, and by his lordship graunted againe to the same Dame Elianor, his mother, for terme of hir lyfe, and therefore in this surveye entered as my lorde's lands as herafter shall appeare.

There ys in the said mannor none advowson or patronage of benefyce, but the same is parcell of the parisshe of Felton and nere adjoyning to the same, only severed by the river Cockett.

² The Duke of Northumberland's MSS.

There ys no woodds save underwoodds, which serve the tenants for reparacons of ther hedge- and such lyke.

There ys no comon nor waist grounde to be improved there for the causes hereafter declared.

The said mannor and towneshippe of Thyrston doth adjoyne upon a greate parte of my lord's parke of Acklyngton and doth border with the towneshippe of Acklyngton, which ys very comodyous for the preservacon and well keapinge of the deare and woodds in the saide parke.

The same towne, being all seytuat together and far from parte of ther grounds, was by the seytuacon thereof unprofitable and therefore a parte is removed towards Acklyngton parke to a place moche more comodyous then where it stode before, as hereafter shall appeare.

There ys no demayne lande nor no demayne medowes but all lyeth in husbandlands and cottages as shall hereafter appeare, viz, of my lord's aunceyent land, xvij husbandelands, at 10s. every husbandelande rente by yere; of the late Sr. Raif Harbottell, vij husbandlands: Strangeweys, ij husbandlands: Bednell [blank in MS.] launds, the launds of Brenkburn.

Hall and Humberston's Survey. Exchequer Q.R. Misc. Books, No. 37, fol. 163.

And for so moche as synce the said survey and devysyon at thys towne my lord hath erected one water mylne within the best platt of ground pertynyng to the weste towne whereby hys lordship hath improved yerely 20s. rent, the scite of the sayd mylne and repaire to the same and also the making of the fleame and damme ys to the tennants of the said West Thirston mo[h] unprofitable which ys to be respected and consydered upon.

And for as moch as at that tyme the sayd towne was devyded the sayd tennants agreed that whereas the rent of the whole towne was £15 to his lordship and others his lordship's freeholders, there shud be £6 therof removed where nowe the Easter towne standeth unto when they appoynted the quantyete of ground to appertayne and belong unto them accordingly by bounders well known wherupon the tennants on both partyes agreeth; and that ther is within the sayd bounders that parcell of ground called the Streight Hill which as before ys declared how yt ys demysed as a severall ground to all the said tennants of both the townes the rent wheof is 6s. 8d. by yeare and that the sayd rente by reason of the sayd partycon ys payd by the sayd tennants of the sayd West Thirston in consyderacon of the premises yt were yf yt so stode with his lordship's pleasure to gyve one yerely allowance of the sayd Streight Hill rent or so much quantyete therof to the tennants of the sayd West Thirston as by his lordship and counsell shalbe thought good.

Item Wher there ys greate controversye betwixt the tennants of both the townes for taking whinnes fourth of the sayd ground of East Thirston and also for the tennants of East Thirston wold have in the begynnyng of somer a litle grounde for to sett their sheilds within the west dyke of Thirston towards the common because of the lord of Felton will not permytt them to make any sheilds without the sayde dyke saying the tennants of East Thirston must of necessitye have ther sheilds in somer sett within the sayd dyk of the wester towne by reason they have to go there comon, and nyghtly to repayre to there howses agayne and that th' others cannot be without parte of the sayd whinnes it wer good his lordship shuld command that they shuld both be holpen according to both there requests.

Hennes to the keper of Acklington parke. It is to be noted that every fyer house with[in] both the townes of Thirston do gyve every year to the keper of Acklington parke one henne called a wood henne the cause wherof ys at length declared in the tittle of the towne of Chatton and so not needfull to be heare mencyoned.

Rent hennes. My lord hath also of every tennant of the sayd two townes one rent henne or in mony of which mony his lordship ys aunswered yerely by the reve notwithstanding if his lordship do lye in the countrye he hath all the sayd rent hennes taken to his lordship's kychyng and in his absence the constable of Warkworth doth take the sayd rent hennes and gyve the said tennants soe mony as they do paye to his lordship for the same.

If th' inhabytors of West and East Thirston do well consyder there dewtye and gyve good respecte toward their owne grounde the townes are so scytuate as before ys p[ar]tely declared, ther will then can no trespas be done within or abowte the parke afforesayde toward the south ende parte but yt may be knowen to his lorship or his officers.

The tennants of the two Thirstons do paye yerely to the hands of the baylyf of Mytforde the some of [blank in MS.] for carryage.

At the muster of the Middle Marches taken at the Moot-law, March 26th, 1580, two horsemen from Easter Thruston and three from Wester Thrustown appeared amongst the tenants of the Warkworth lordship.¹

A survey made about eight years after amplifies, and in a striking manner confirms, many of the details of the earlier survey.

² There seems to be confusion here between Eleanor daughter of Guischarde Harbottle, who married Thomas Percy and was the mother of the seventh earl, and Eleanor daughter of Lawrence Acton who married Ralph Percy. Christiana Monboucher's half naturally descended to Eleanor Harbottle and her sister Mary Fitton, just as the half belonging to Christiana Monboucher's sister Eleanor Umframvill, afterwards Eleanor Aske, descended to John Sayer, mentioned as the free tenant of the other half in the list of free tenants in 1567—see p. 305 supra. The Eleanor Lady Percy mentioned in the list could not have been Eleanor daughter of Lawrence Acton, for she must have been dead long before 1567, and her henness was Joan Thirkeld. The fact that the mistake is apparently contemporary makes it the more difficult to explain away.

In libro feodorum militum in Scaccario domini regis apud Westmonasterium remanente inter alia continentur sic.

Barronia de Mytford.

Rogerus Bartram tenet de domino rege Mytford cum membris, scilicet Newton, Throphill, etc., Eshett, Bokenfeld, Thrastrestone (modo vulgariter vocata Threston), la haute Felton, cum membris, scilicet, parva Felton, Acton, Swarland, Ovresgares, Glantley et Framlington per quart. feod. de veteri feoffamento. De eodem Rogero, Willelmus Hardryshill tenet Thrastreston centum solidatas terre per xx^{um} partem unius feodi de novo feoffamento. Heres Johannis filii Roberti tenet Esshet et Bokenfeld per iiij^{um} partem unius feodi de veteri feoffamento. Adam Maufesour tenet de eodem Rogero in soragio, unam carucatam terre in Thrastraston predicta pro iij^o.

The manor and townshipp of Thraston is scituate in the inner ward, and was sometyme parcell of the barony of Mytforth, and holden of the same by the lords thereof, but beyng com into the prynce's handes at diverse tymes, and from thence geven or restored to his lordship's ancestors, the tenure is altered and now holden amongst all other his lordship's landes of the quene's majestie by the xth parte of a knight's fee, as by his lordship's letters patentes may appere, yet, nevertheless, yt payeth cornage to and with the lordshipp of Mytford. But all such as have landes ther do hold the same of his lordship as hereafter doth appere. And the said towne doth adjoyne upon a great parte of his lordship's parke of Acklington and doth bounder with the towneshipp of Acklington.

Benyfyce. There is in the said manner of Thraston noe advowson or patronage of benyfyce, but is parcell of the paryshe of Felton, and nere adjoyning the same, onely severed by the river of Cokett.

Woods. Ther is ther noe woodes save underwoodes which serve the tenautes for ther hedges or fences and such like necessaries.

Husbandlands. There is no demayne landes arrable medowe nor pasture, but alltogether in husbandlands and cotages as after appeareth.

Mylne. The lord hath ther a water corne mylne, latlye erected by the right honorable Thomas, late erle of Northumberland, now in the occupation of Robert Scarfield, for tearme of yeres as after apereth.

Rent hennes. Everie tenaunte ther do pay to the lord of Thurston, one rent henn at such time as his lordship doth lye at the castles of Alnewick or Warkworth or els where in the country, and in his absence do pay yerely to the reave to his lordship's use in monye for the said hennes, iiii' ix^d.

Wod-hennes. The said tenautes and inhabitantes of Thraston doe likewise pay yerely to the keper of Acklington parke, one henne at Christemas (quo jure inquiratur), but is supposed for suffering them to have and take wodd in his lordship's parke at Acklington.

It will be noticed that the seven husbandlands inherited by the seventh earl through his mother, the co-heiress of the Harbottles, had not at his execution in 1572 devolved with the entailed lands upon his brother the eighth earl, but at the time of the survey were still in the Queen's hands, nor were they ever restored either to the attained earl's daughters and heirs general, or to his heir male and successor in the earldom.

At the muster of light horsemen, taken at Aberwick Edge, November 24th, 1595, George Reede, William Day, Robte Richeson, Rich. Richeson, Tho. Tyndell, Robt. Shilverton, and Robt. Smyth appeared from Thirston, armed with spears and furnished with defensive armour, but without horses. Thos. Pott armed with a petronell, furnished with defensive armour, rode on a 'glead hewde' trotting gelding of 16 hands.¹

As long as the country lay open and unenclosed, the rural townships were in continual warfare with one another, respecting strays, inter-common, etc. Thirston was no exception to the rule, for the tenants there had a dispute, apparently chronic, with the lord and tenants of Bockenfield. On June 16th, 1591, William Fenwick, writing from Alnewick to the earl, says:

My verye good lord,

Maye yt please your honour to be advertised that wheras there was greate controversie betwene one John Heron of Bokenfeeld and your lordship's tennants of Thirston and some of her majestie's tennants of the same towne for certen grounde, which the said tenants doe affirme have always apperteigned unto them, as they canne declare unto your honour more at large, to whose reporte and credit I refer the circumstance therof for that two of them are nowe come up to London, the one beinge your lordship's tennante and the other her majestic's, said tennante to make their humble supplication against the said Heron, one unto my lord treasurer and the other unto your lordship, for that the said Heron doth in suche owtrageous maner disturb their possession and abuse the pore men in beatinge them and strykinge and sleainge their cattell with lance staves and boundinge them with mastice dogs, that except there be some reformation therein they will leave the towne rather than lyve in this troublesome maner and have ther cattell slaine to their utter undonge. And for that he is of that surname yt maketh me to be the slacker in doinge my dewtie because yt would be suspected I should dou yt rather upon occasion of some particular cause of mine owne than for the equitie of the pore men's cause. And since the said Heron's retorne frome London he exceedeth more than he dyd before, by what incorigement I knowe not.¹

The following petition, although dated on the following day, probably accompanied Fenwick's letter :

Emanuell.

This is to certifie your lordship howe we, your tennants of Thriston, are used by Mr. Jhon Hearon of Bockenfeld. First, the sayd Jhon Hearon for the space of iii yeares hath molested and troubled us, your lordship's power tenants, for he will not suffer our cattell to goe upon your ground called Elstrother, but with force doth both pinde our cattell and hurt them and slay some of them, as we are able to prove. We, your power tenants, are able to prove that we and our predecessors have occupied and injoyed this said ground of your lordship's called Elstrother verie quietly and without trouble or vexation of any man for the space of one hundereth yeares and more. We, theirfor, your power tenants, doe nowe seeke to your lordshipe for redres in this matter, for without your lordship's healpe both we, your tenants, shalbe impovrished and in dainger to lease (sic) our lyeves to the utter undoing of our wyves and children, and not only us, but it will within very short time bring your towne to decay, for the sayd Jhon Hearon will not suffer us to gett flaggs for the repaying of your howses. Thus, with our most boundent service unto your lordship remembred, we cease to trouble you any further at this time, but doth commit you in the keeping of Almightye God, who evermore preserve and keepe your lordship in health, welth and wisdom and honor unto your live's end.²

Thriston, this 17th of June, 1591.

William Fenwick, writing from Wallington in July, 1592, 'to the right honourable and his singular good lord, Henry, earl of Northumberland,' states :

I understand that John Heron of Bockenfield, the day before his coming to your lordship, did not only beat your honour's tenants but also did take from them their spades and other tools wherewith they were cutting their fuel for their winter fire and will not suffer them to have their things as they and their ancestors have had without impediment of him or any of his ancestors, to the disinheriting of your honour and the undoing of your lordship's poor tenants there.

On May 12th, 1601, Thomas Percy writes :

Mr. Lesley of Felton hath encroached and inclosed upon your lordship's common belonging to the manor of Therston. The like doth Mr. Heron of Bockenfeld upon the same common. Item, Mr. Hasebrige hath inclosed upon the moore.

John Fenwick writes from Wallington, March 6th, 1640/50, to Hugh Potter at Northumberland House :

'Upon Munday last, Thomas Dobson and Robert Clay of Thirston, in the name of all the tenants there came hither to mee to acquaint me that Mr Robert Lisle of Felton, hath inclosed a peice of ground near to Cathewgh whereon the tenants of Thirston hath had the catage in comon with ye said Mr. Lisle, as also liberty to take fuses and whins thence as often as they had occacon without any disturbance att all time out of memory. I have directed the tenants to cast downe ye enclosure.'

The freehold and leasehold lands at Thirston lay together in the open and unenclosed townfields until 1657. Sir Arthur Hesilrigg writes from Eslington, September 16th, 1657, to his 'worthy friend, Hugh Potter, esquire, att Alnewick Castle,' that he understands 'that there was an agreement by my sonn Fenwick and yourself for the deviding of your lands att West Thirston. It seems the earle hath five farms of the towne, and Colonel Fenwick had fower. I am of that opinion that you were in the right way intending a devisiion, doubtless it would have been for the advantage both of my lord's tennants and the colonel's. I am willing, if you please, to goe on in the same way and doe intreate you that what is just and equall for the tennants on both sides may be done. If you please to appointe surveyors what concernes my daughter's part shall be paid.'²

Other freeholders were concerned in the division, and in reply to enquiries Potter was informed that one of them, Mr. Clavering, 'is now soe sicke, that there is nothing expected but death at him. It is pretended Mr. Fenwicke, late collonell, had ane estate in the same, and now the daughter of Sr. Arthur Hesilrigg maketh clayme thereunto and her father Sr. Arthur in her right.' Potter is warned that 'admitt Sr. Arthur in one inche, and he will have an elle, Collingwood's case considered.'¹

Articles of agreement were entered into and signed October 29th, 1657. Robert Widdrington of Hauxley, and Francis Forster of Low Buston, gentlemen, were nominated arbitrators for the earl and his tenants, John Henderson was appointed to act for Colonel Fenwick's four farms, and Robert Tomlyn, a freeholder, was represented by Joseph Forster of Shilbottle Wood-house, and William Archbold of Cawledge-park, gentlemen. The arbitrators were instructed to make a survey of West Thirston, and to make an equal division, 'according to their severall proporcions, so as it may be layde together for their better conveniencye; provided allwayes that the said earle and his heires may have free libertie to work and winne glasse clay in any of the grounds so to be divided, giving reasonable satisfaction for any damage shalbe done in working thereof.' Convenient ways were also to be reserved to Thirston mill.

Whereas the division of the lordship of West Thirston, in the county of Northumberland, being the lands of the Right Honourable Algernone, earle of Northumberland, and of Collonell George Fenwicke, deceased, and Robert Tomlinge, William Swann, and William Taylor, freholders there, was referred to us, whose names are subscribed, to set forth order and award by the commissioners of the said earle and the tenants and agents for the said collonell's lands, and the said freholders we order and award the said division as followeth,

First, that the said lands and tenements and all and singular their appurtenances (except garths) shalbe divided by survey, according to the said severall parties auncient rent there savinge one noble worth of Collonell Fenwick's land is to abate of its measure so much as it hath of land in East Triston feilds belonging to it.

Eighthly, it is awarded that each partie within written, shall assure and convey by sufficient conveyance in the law as counsell shall advise, all the lands so set forth unto them as aforesaid and pay the surveyors according to their severall auncient rents, and all wayes to mills and marketts and all omissions be referred to the said arbitrators.

West Thirston, December 14th. 1657. (Signed) Robt. Widdrington, Francis Forster, Joseph Forster, William Archbould,

Unfortunately, the Book of Rates of 1663 is imperfect, so far as it relates to Thirston, and only the general statement is made, that part of West Thirston, belonging to Philip Bavington, esquire, was rated at £30 a year, and 'the rest of East and West Thirston (belongs) to the earl of Northumberland.'¹

It has not been ascertained how the 'ancient farms,' which in 1567 and 1585 numbered not less than twenty-nine, came to be reduced to twenty-two, the number formerly constituting the basis of assessment for the church rates, etc.,² of the parish of Felton.

A seam of clay, of a quality suitable for use at the glasshouses, was opened at Thirston about the beginning of the seventeenth century, having been accidentally discovered, it is said, by a travelling Frenchman 'going along the road, being a glass man.' A lease for 21 years of 'a myne of clay used for making of glasses' was granted from Lady-day, 1624, to Sir Robert Mansell, knight. 'The clay pitts and the clay thence to be gotten or obtained (for the use of glass works)¹ were let by lease dated November 29th, 1675, by Arthur, earl of Essex, and William Pierrepont of Thoresby, Notts (the trustees of the infant Lady Elizabeth Percy), to Edward Widdrington of Felton, at a rent of 10s. a ton of clay.² A survey made about 1727³ states that the 'myne of clay which the glass makers doth use in potts at the glass houses' was then held by Francis Anderson, who vended the clay 'to the glass owners att Newcastle and other places at the rate of 20s. per tunne,' but the selling price had been reduced by the supplies of Bristol and Stourbridge clay brought to Newcastle 'by sea for a trifle as ballast of shippes.' It was proposed that a level should be 'carryed up from the river of Cockett about halfe a myle thorow a hard rock above thirteen fawdom deepness.'¹ Wallis writing about 1769, says that

At West Thurston, near Felton (there) is an argillaceous earth of an ash colour. It is of a dense compact texture, mctuous to the touch, melts slowly on the tongue, with a little grittiness; breaks and moulders in water with difficulty. Depurated and worked into a paste, it assumes a milk white colour, and cuts through with a glossy surface, and on being smoothed with a knife, has a fine skin when dry. . . . It is used at the glass houses in Newcastle² for making furnaces or vessels, that will bear an intense fire; for which use it is not inferior to any in Britain . . . and only rivalled by the Sturbridge clay.³ It has been worked for many years, and still holds its reputation. The mine is about twenty fathom deep, the clay vein three feet thick, under a variety of strata, one of coal; it is lett, worked and sold by the ton; yielding £3 per ton.⁴

The lease of the mine was given up about 1772, and the clay has not been worked for many years.

On August 31st, 1610, tenements and lands in Thirston in the tenure of Thomas Hudson, James Hall, George Awder, and William Garret were granted to John Eldred, William Whitmore, and others on a lease for 60 years at the respective yearly rents of 13s. 4d., 10d., 8s. 2d., and 10s.⁵ A tenement in Thirston with 12 acres of arable land, 3 acres of meadow, and common of pasture in 'Hidemore,' then in the tenure of Thomas Hynde, of the yearly value of 7s., formerly belonging to the monastery of Brinkburn, was granted February 9th, 1614/5, to George Lowe and Edmund Sawyer to hold of the king as of the manor of East Greenwich by fealty only in socage.⁶ On July 14th, 1616, the four tenements leased to Eldred and Whitmore in 1610, with the husbandlands, etc., parcel of the manor of Preston, held by James Scarr at 7s. 6d. a year, were granted with other places to Sir George Selby, knight, Sir John Fenwick, knight, and John Dudley, esquire, to hold of the king in chief by the service of one knight's fee.⁷

² In 1695 the output was 106 tons, in 1762, 188 tons, in 1763, 283 tons. At that period the clay seems also to have been carried to Howdon Panns. Duke of Northumberland's MSS.

³ These are to certify whom it may concern that the proprietors of St. Lawrence Bottle-house used last year thirty potts and upwards made of Felton clay which stood equally well with those made of Stourbridge clay used at the same time, and have at this present time standing whole in the furnace four Felton pots, viz., one, four weeks; two, three weeks; and one, two weeks old, etc. Newcastle Courant, September 25th, 1762.

The freeholds held successively by the families of Felton and Hastings of Edlingham may possibly be identified with the husbandlands occupied by the Beadnells during the sixteenth century. On February 14th, 1610/1,¹ George Beadnell of Lemington, and his mother, Alice Conyers, with John Beadnell of Barnhill, conveyed property in East Thirston to Henry Johnson of Morwick. Eight years later, on January 29th, 1618/9,² they conveyed lands in the same place to Thomas Wright of Morwick, whose name appears in the list of free tenants in 1620. Wright either purchased for or conveyed to Johnson,³ whose lands remained with his descendants until they were sold in 1726 by the widow and son of William Musgrave of Newcastle, physician, to William Wilkinson of High Buston.⁴ Five years later, Wilkinson conveyed to Edward Gallon of Alnwick, apparently in trust for Richard Grieve of the same place. Grieve in 1748 sold the estate to Robert Potts of Thirston, yeoman,⁵ who enlarged it by other purchases.⁶

By his will, dated March 17th, 1795, Robert Potts of East Thirston gave his real estate to his kinsman Robert Fenwick of Morpeth, father of the late Mr. Andrew Robert Fenwick, to whose daughter, Mrs. Charles Thorp, it now belongs.

The property held at West Thirston in 1620 by John Swan was mortgaged, January 3rd, 1678/9, by a man bearing the same name, to Matthew Towns of Long Dike, and seven years later was conveyed to him absolutely. In 1769 James Towns mortgaged to Richard Young and Thomas Potts, the mortgage being assigned in 1770 to Robert Potts, and in 1776 Towns conveyed to John Potts, son of the said Robert Potts, absolutely.⁷

The lands in Thirston, which belonged to the Crown, were acquired, in whole or in part, by Colonel George Fenwick of Brinkburn, governor of Berwick. His will is dated February 2nd, 1656/7, and he died on the 15th of March following. His second wife was Katherine, daughter of Sir Arthur Heselrigg of Noseley in Leicestershire, the distinguished parliamentarian. After Colonel Fenwick's death, she married Major Philip Babington of Harnham, governor of Berwick, who in 1663 was rated for the lands at Thirston and Tritlington, given to his wife by her first husband. Mrs. Babington died at Harnham, August 28th, 1670, and was buried in the garden there, like the patriarch Abraham, in her own rock-tomb or sepulchre.⁸ The property at Thirston and Tritlington thereupon passed to Thomas Ledgard of Newcastle, husband of Colonel George Fenwick's sister Mary. He, in Michaelmas term, 1671, suffered a recovery of 4 messuages, 50 acres of land, 4 acres of meadow, 50 acres of pasture, 100 acres of furze and heath, and 60 acres of moor, with the appurtenances in Thirston and Tritlington.¹

Some of the lands now owned by the duke of Northumberland in West Thirston belonged to John Lisle of Felton in 1616, to George Beadnell of Lemington in 1618, to Robert Carr of Longraw in 1624, to George Hunter of Acklington in 1641, to Robert Tomlin of West Thirston in 1649, etc. Barbara Tomlin of West Thirston, widow, conveyed to Gabriel Redhead of the Lee in the parish of Rothbury in 1736, who by his will dated January 28th, 1767, gave his lands at Thirston to his eldest son, Robert Readhead. The latter, while residing at Amble, mortgaged the same property, June 11th, 1785, to Thomas Ulderton of Alnwick. He subsequently assigned the land to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and they in 1812 sold to the duke of Northumberland.¹

At the Peth-foot, and near the south end of Felton bridge, over the door of a seventeenth century house, there is a panel bearing in mouldering characters the following inscription: ANNO . DNI . 1617 | PRO . 24 . | VERSE . 3 | THROUGH . WISD | OME . IS . AN . HOU | SE . BULDED . AN | D . WITH UNDER | STAN | DING | IT . IS . ESTABLISHED . |

It formerly belonged to Thomas Airey of North Shields, and was sold by his son, John Airey of Newcastle, in 1713 to Joseph Ledgard of Alnwick, who three years afterwards, under the description of Joseph Ledgard of Elswick, conveyed it to Francis Jobber² of Newburn. The latter voted in right of it at the election of knights of the shire in 1723. It was sold in 1758 by his son Walter Jobber, at that time residing at Ashford, Kent, to Francis Forster of Elford. He made it his residence until his death about 1760. Francis Forster's daughter, Mrs. Edward Dale, settled it about 1778 upon her kinsfolk, Robert Alnwick and Ann, his wife, for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and subject to these life interests, her husband, or her son, Edward Dale sold it to Mr. Ralph Riddell, to whose representative, Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, it now belongs.

At the election of knights of the shire in 1710, Thomas Thomlin, George Towns, James Towns, and John Taylor, all of West Thirston, and William Swan and Robert Swan, both of East Thirston, voted for their respective freeholds. In 1715 Thomas Swan and Thomas Smith of West Thirston and Robert Swan of Thirston voted; in 1723 Thomas Swan of Thirston voted for Thirston, Robert Swan of East Thirston voted for East Thirston, James Towns of Pegsworth, Thomas Smith and John Taylor, both of West Thirston, voted for West Thirston. In 1734 Thomas Smith of West Thirston and Matthew Towns of Pegsworth voted for West Thirston, Robert and Thomas Swan voted for freeholds in Thirston, while John Taylor's vote was rejected because he had previously conveyed his land to his son. Robert Swan of East Thirston voted for lands there in 1748, and at the same election there voted for lands in West Thirston Robert Dodd, Thomas Swan, Thomas Smith, John Taylor, John Taylor, junior, and Matthew Towns, all of whom resided at West Thirston except Towns, who resided at Pegsworth. In 1774 John Potts and Robert Swan, both of East Thirston, voted for lands there, while William Bamburgh, James Henderson, Thomas Smith, all of West Thirston, James Moncaster of Wallsend and James Towns of Pegsworth, all voted for lands in West Thirston. At the great contested elections of 1826 Roger Bambrongh of West Thirston, Thomas Bambrongh of Newcastle, and Stephen Thompson of Backworth seem to have voted for freeholds in Thirston. Thomas Smith of Thirston voted for Howdens.

The present proprietors in East Thirston, with their respective acreage, are: the duke of Northumberland, 387 acres; Mrs. Charles Thorp, 179 acres; Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, 112 acres; Mr. A. Kennedy, 1 acre. And in West Thirston: the duke of Northumberland, 195 acres; Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, 621 acres;¹ Mr. T. W. Smith, 321 acres; Mr. Edward Newton, 13 acres; Mr. G. C. Barker, 2 acres; Mr. James Horn, 2 acres.

The estate of Shothaugh, formerly a separate township, was given by the will of Robert Lisle of Felton, dated November 4th, 1657, to 'his cousin' John Ripley of Pethfoot,² who in 1663 was rated for the same at £13 6s. 8d.³ By his will, dated February 1st, 1661/2, John Ripley gave Shothaugh to his wife Mary and her heirs, and mentions his daughters, Anne Mitford and Mary Carr, his sons-in-law, William Carr and John Carr, his daughter-in-law, Anne Carr, and his grandchild, Anne Mitford.⁴ He died at Shothaugh in 1663, and was buried on December 5th.⁵ Shothaugh has long formed part of the Felton estates and now belongs to Mr. Cuthbert Riddell.

ESHOT TOWNSHIP.

The township of Eshot, comprising 1,793 acres, occupies the south-eastern angle of Felton parish, and in 1901 had a population of 120.¹

Held originally of the barony of Mitford by Walter fitz William, lord of Whalton, the manor of Eshot, in process of time, and perhaps irregularly, came to be held as of the barony of Whalton.² The latter, having come into the king's hands, was granted, June 6th, 1205, to Robert fitz Roger, lord of Warkworth,³ whose wife, Margaret, daughter of William de Chesney, is stated to have been a descendant of Walter fitz William, lord of Whalton.⁴ But before Whalton had come into the king's hands Eshot and some other manors had been owned by Constance, daughter of Walter fitz William, sometimes called Constance de Crammeville, who granted the villis of Hessel and Bekenfeld to Godfrey Mauduit.⁵ The latter obtained a confirmation from King John, April 24th, 1200,⁶ and although the Lady Constance changed her mind, and in 1209 sought to recover the lands of which she alleged Godfred Mauduit had beguiled her,⁷ he

Has praedictas terras in villis praenominatis dedi et concessi, et hac mea praesenti carta confirmavi, praedictae matri ecclesiae de Felton, tenendas et habendas de me et de heredibus meis in liberam, et puram, et perpetuam elemosinam modis omnibus profuturas, sine omni retinemento mei vel heredum meorum, adeo libere et quiete, plene et honorifice, sicut aliqua elemosina potest liberius, et quietius, et securius dari, sine omni seculari servitio, et exactione, et consuetudine, in bosco et plano, in moris, et pratis, et pasturis, in viis et semitis, in cultis et in incultis, cum libero introitu et exitu et omnibus aliis aysiamentis et libertatibus in liberis communitatibus ad easdem villas pertinentibus. Concedo etiam quod vi boves qui arabunt terram praedictae ecclesiae in campo de Esschet et duae vaccae pascant in omnibus locis, ubi boves vel vaccae domini praedictarum villarum pascunt. Has praedictas terras et libertates warantizabimus, ego et heredes mei, praedictae matri ecclesiae de Felton contra omnes homines et feminas, qui vivunt vel mori possunt. Quod si easdem terras praedictae ecclesiae warantizare non poterimus, dabimus pacabile escambium in campis praedictarum villarum. fitz John in 1249 was succeeded by his son, Robert fitz Roger, against whom an action was brought at Hilary term, 1273, by Robert de Nevill and Ida his wife, to recover one third part of a knight's fee and 16s. 8d. rent in Esset and Bokenefeld.¹

Godfrey Mauduit was succeeded by his son Roger Mauduit, who in 1244² confirmed his father's grant of lands in Eshot and Bockenfield to the prior and convent of Brinkburn, and his name frequently occurs as an attesting witness to charters printed in the Brinkburn Chartulary.

In consequence of a dispute between Sir William Heron and Sir Roger Manduyt, whereby many attachments and pleas had been brought against Roger and his men of Eshett and Bockinfeld, it was settled in 1245 on the following terms: That William granted for himself and his heirs that Roger and his heirs should have their estovers in the woods of the Helme and of Elstrother as Roger ought to have, and was accustomed to have in the time of Roger Bertram of Midford, lord of the wood of the Helme and Elstrother, so that their livery should be yearly made to them at the feast of St. Helen the Virgin by one (appointed by William and his heirs); and that to carry and remove livery they should have time up to the ninth day next following Michaelmas. William also granted to Roger, his heirs and his men of Eshett and Bockinfeld, that they should not be harassed by reason of suspicion of any offence committed in the same woods. If any, however, were found with wood improperly taken, or the foresters of William had prosecuted any trespassers, the trespasser from the said vill, whoever he might be, was to pay to William 12 pence for an amercement. What was found on the trespasser was to remain to William. If the trespass in the said woods was repeated thrice, 2s. was to be paid as amercement, of which 18d. was to remain to William, together with the wood improperly taken, and 6d. was to remain to Roger. But if it shall happen the said Roger, or his heirs or his men of the said vills, being attached within or without the said woods, for any fault committed in them, to be impleaded and to wish to refuse bail and attachment (i.e., to be bailed and attached), let them go without delay to Calceta (Cawsey park) with five others (as compurgators) and make law for it (i.e., get absolved by the oaths of the five).¹ And as soon as they shall have made this law they shall depart freely therefrom as far as that offence is concerned. And if they are defaulters in this law they shall answer for the said amercement. William and his heirs are to receive yearly a kenne² of nuts from every house whence smoke issues at Martinmas, if the dwellers in the houses have gathered any nuts in the said woods, and if they can show on their own word that they have not gathered any, they shall be free, but if they cannot do so they are to pay the nuts. If in the same house there are families who live apart, William is to receive a kenne of nuts from each of such families. William and his heirs are to receive from each of the said houses yearly at the same term one hen for breckens and dry wood found lying on the ground. The smith of Roger and his heirs in Eshett shall have and enjoy his right in the said woods, as he was accustomed to have in the time of Sir Roger Bertram of Midford.

For this concession of William, Roger Mauduyt grants, remits and quitclaims for himself and his heirs to William and his heirs for ever all right and claim he has, or may have, by reason of common or any other right in the whole of that land which is within the road extending from the quarter of Lachause as far as Fisherford on the west part of the said road as far as the fence of the field of Bockinfeld; that it shall be lawful for the said William and his heirs, the said land within the said bounds, to assart, enclose and bring into cultivation, and to treat in any other way which shall best be to their advantage, without any contradiction and hindrance of Roger and his heirs. Provided that such a fence is made on the east part of the said land that the beasts of Roger and his heirs and his men of the said vills shall be unable to enter on the east part by default of a sufficient enclosure, and that if by such default they shall enter by that part they shall be driven out quietly and without impounding. And after the corn and hay are removed entirely from the said land, the beasts of Roger and his heirs and his men of the said vill shall feed on the herbage within the said bounds. And for paying the amercements, making the said rules, and prosecuting complaints and putting off delays about the said woods by Roger, his heirs and men of the said vill, a certain place shall be assigned for ever at the aforesaid vill of Calceta, within the cemetery of the chapel, for the amercements, rent of nuts and paying of hens and making of rules in the form aforesaid. It shall be lawful for William, his heirs or others for this purpose assigned, to distrain upon the beasts and animals found in the said woods.¹

Sir Roger Mauduit appears to have married a certain Isabella, sister of Dyonisia, wife of Fulk de Tybenham, with her sister co-heiress of lands in Tritlington and Earsdon.¹ At her request Roger Mauduit granted to the abbot and convent of Newminster a quarter of wheat, or 4s. to be paid yearly out of Tritlington, for the making of the hosts used in the celebration of mass.² In her memory he founded an obit at Newminster and charged his mill at Eschette with the payment of 20s. per annum. A general absolution was to be given in the chapter house on the feast of the translation of St. Thomas (July 7th), the anniversary of his wife's death, a pittance was to be provided for the monks, and a dole was to be given to the poor at the abbey gate.³

Roger Mauduit and Isabella his wife were parties to an action at the Northumberland assizes in 1256;⁴ in 1264 he is styled 'dominus' Roger Mauduit,⁵ but he died before 1269, when Ralph, son of Robert le Breton, brought an action at the Northumberland assizes against Roger,⁶

By another charter, Dyonisia de Tritlington, apparently the same lady, granted certain other lands at Tritlington to the abbot and convent, which grant was confirmed by Gerard de Widdrington. Ibid., p. 227.

son of Roger Mauduit, concerning a messuage and lands in Earsdon, in which Isabella, mother of the said Roger, is mentioned.¹ By a final concord, made at Newcastle, Roger retained the land and gave Ralph ten marks of silver.² Some small payments made by Roger Mauduit are accounted for in the Pipe Rolls between 1272 and 1275.

At the Northumberland assizes of 1279 there was a suit between Roger Mauduit and Roger Conyers respecting a fence in 'Hon' which Conyers had removed, to the injury of Mauduit's free tenement in Eshot.³

The name of Roger Mauduit II. occurs in the list, returned by the sheriff in a full county court held September 22nd, 1278, of those possessed of lands of the value of £20 per annum, not held in chief, but of a mesne lord.⁴ This was apparently a presentation of those persons who, being qualified, had not, on account of the expense connected with it, taken upon them the order of knighthood. Roger Mauduit evidently submitted, and he is described as a knight in a Brinkburn charter granted in 1296,⁵ and also in the document appointing him to be one of the two collectors for the eleventh and seventh in the county of Northumberland.⁶

Roger Mauduit was chosen one of the knights of the shire for Northumberland in 1297,¹ and on March 14th, 1306/7, for his services in Scotland he had a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands of Esshet and Bockinfeld.²

On February 26th, 1308/9, the sheriff of Northumberland was ordered not to put Roger Heyrun in default because he did not appear in the action in the sheriff's court between him and Roger Maudut concerning the cattle of the said Roger Heyrun, unjustly taken and detained, inasmuch as he, being in the king's service on the day appointed for the hearing of the cause, could not appear.³ On July 22nd, 1310, the king, being at Westminster, granted a licence to Roger Mauduit to crenellate his dwelling-house at Eshot (mansum suum de Esshete).⁴

At this time he held his manor and lands at Eshet and Bokynfeld of Robert fitz Roger as of the manor of Whalton by the service of one-fourth part of a knight's fee.⁵

William Mauduyt, Adam Mauduyt, John Fraunceys of Felton, Nicholas Haukeslawe (Hauxley), and others, who had been concerned in an unrecorded outrage, had the king's licence, September 25th, 1318, to go to the papal court at Rome, there to obtain absolution for offences committed on the Scottish marches.⁶

John de Eschet, with Henry Ogle and other local men, was a squire-at-arms, November 6th, 1319, at the garrison of Berwick-on-Tweed.¹

The date of the decease of Roger Mauduit II. is not known, but it was probably Roger Mauduit III. who married (1325-1327) Eleanor, second wife and widow of Robert de Umframvill, second earl of Angus.² As parcel of her dower she had of her first husband's lands, July 10th, 1325, a moiety of a knight's fee in Netherton in Coquetdale, and lands and a fishery at Ovingham, which she and her second husband, Roger Mauduyt, recovered January 28th, 1327/8, from the keepers of the late earl of Angus's lands in Northumberland.³

On February 20th, 1327/8, a commission of oyer et terminer was issued to William de Denum and others on the complaint of Roger Mauduyt, charging John Stov and others with having carried away from Redeshead (Redesheved) and Erleside, both in Northumberland, 60 horses, 20 oxen and 20 cows, of the value of £100, together with John, son of Alan, son of Stephen de Kulkas, and William Blaykes, prisoners of war, whereby he lost their ransom of £20.⁴

On May 21st, 1328, Sir Roger Mauduit, knight, and Robert de Tughall were appointed to receive on behalf of Joan, the king's sister, lands of the value of £2,000 per annum, assigned by Robert, king of Scotland, as her dower,⁵ and four days later the keeper of the wardrobe was ordered to take an account with them for the expenses they had incurred or were about to incur.⁶

At the request of Roger Mauduyt an exemplification was granted to him October 3rd, 1331, of letters patent of February 12th, 1326/7, being a pardon to the men of Northumberland for money due to the exchequer.⁷

On the Sunday before the Decollation of St. John Baptist (August 29th), 1332, at Faudon, in the parish of Ingram, William de Tyndale, the sheriff, by the king's brief delivered to Roger Mauduit and Alienor his wife a third part of the manor of Faudon, to hold as dower of Alienor. They had recovered this at Westminster before the king's justices against Archibald de Douglas. There are two seals attached to the document.

The second seal is round, 1 inch diameter, and has four shields arranged point to point: 1, semée of crosses, a cinquefoil (Umframvill); 2, fess between three birds [popinjays] (Lumley or Thweng); 3, three chevronels, over all a label; 4, arms of Mauduyt. As sheriff Roger Mauduyt was appointed, March 20th, 1332/3, with other magnates of the county, to array the men of Northumberland between the ages of sixteen and sixty, both horsemen and footmen, and to lead them to the king for service against the Scots, if required, with power to arrest any found disobedient or in rebellion.²

An inquisition was held at Newcastle, June 25th, 1332, to ascertain whether it would be to the king's damage to grant a licence to Roger Mauduit to found a chantry in St. Michael's church, Felton, and to endow it with 100s. rent in Eshet and Bokynfeld, to maintain a chaplain to say mass daily for his soul and for the souls of his heirs and ancestors. It was stated that the said rent was held of Geoffrey le Escrop as of the barony of Whalton by the service of a penny to be paid yearly; that there was no other mesne lord between the king and Roger Mauduit, except the said Geoffrey, who held of the king in chief by knight's service, and that there remained to Roger in Esshet and Bockynfeld 100s. rent beyond the said gift.³

In the British Museum there is a seal of Sir Roger Mauduyt, chevalier. It is round, $\frac{3}{4}$ in., and has a shield of arms, couché, ermine two bars: crest, on a helmet and lambrequins, a tree (?). In the field, on each side, a wavy branch of quatrefoiled flowers springing from a human heart. The legend is uncertain. The date is 1322. Catalogue of Seals Brit. Mus. vol. iii. p. 243.

On January 26th, 1334/5, Roger Maudut was appointed a commissioner of array to see that the men of Northumberland were duly furnished with arms according to the king's proclamation and the statute of Winchester, and to array them for the defence of the realm,¹ a similar appointment being given to John Mauduyt for Wiltshire.² In the following July, Roger Mauduyt and John Mauduyt were appointed to keep the king's peace, the statute of Northampton, and the ordinance of the last parliament at York, in the counties of Northumberland and Wiltshire respectively, after the king should have gone to Scotland.³ This conjunction of names suggests the connection of the Northumberland family of Mauduit with that of Warminster.⁴

Subsequent to the licence to endow the chantry at Felton in 1332, and possibly after 1349, in which year the name of Sir Roger Mauduit is placed before that of the sheriff of the county among the attesting witnesses of two charters in the Brinkburn Chartulary,⁵ and before the year 1358, Eshot came into the hands of the Crown through the rebellion of its owner. An entry in the Patent Rolls for 1358 records that the king had restored and granted to Roger Mauduit, in fee, the castle, town and manor of Eshete, late his father Roger's, a rebel,⁶ but by a settlement

MAUDUIT OF ESHOT.

ARMS: Ermine, two bars gules. Seal of Sir Roger Mauduit, 1312.

SIR GODFREY MAUDUIT, knight, purchased Felton in 1200 (Cal. Chart., fol. 369); was living 27th May, 1224 (Brink Chart., p. 11). His name is written in the Dunham Liber Vita (p. 109).

Sir Roger Mauduit I. of Eshot, knight, in 1244 confirmed his father's grant to Brinkburn (Brinkburn Chart., p. 60), was living in 1264 (ibid., p. 15), but was dead before 1269 (Assize Rolls, pp. 171, 173).

Isabella, who was co-heiress of the manor of Trilington, living 1236, died before 1294 (Assize Rolls, pp. 46, 171); her obit was kept at Newminster on the 7th July, the anniversary of her death (Newminster Chart., p. 17).

Sir Roger Mauduit II. of Eshot, knight, granted a licence to the abbot and convent of Newminster to enclose their land at Trilington (Newminster Chart., p. 228); knight of the shire for Northumberland in 1297; had licence to encellate his house at Eshot in 1316 (Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1307-1313, p. 272).

Sibilla, wife of Richard de Hedley (Newminster Chart., pp. 26, 27)

Sir Roger Mauduit III. of Eshot, knight, founded a charity at Felton in 1332 (Inq. ad quod dam., file 219, No. 11); sheriff of Northumberland in 1332; a commissioner of array in 1335 (Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1334-1338, p. 139).

Eleanor, widow of Robert de Umfravill, earl of Angus (Cal. Case Rolls, 1327-1330, p. 259).

John Mauduit, living 17th July, 1358.

William Mauduit, and Adam Mauduit, had licence, 25th September, 1318, to go to Rome to seek absolution (Cal. Pat., 12 Edw. II. pt. i.).

Roger Mauduit, to whom Edward III. in 1358 restored the castle, town, and manor of Eshot, late the property of his father, Roger Mauduit, a rebel (Pat. Rolls, 32 Edw. III. pt. i. m. 9).

John Mauduit, son of Sir Roger Mauduit, settled the manor of Eshot, by deed dated 7th July, 1358, upon his father for life, with many remainder- (Lansdowne MS. 326, fol. 43 b); cousin and next heir of John Bekard of Burton Leonard (Rot. Parl., vol. ii, p. 192).

Joanna, mentioned in deed of 7th July, 1358; (Lansdowne MS. 326, fol. 47 b).

Roger Mauduit of Burton Leonard, son and heir, quit-claimed the manor of Eshot in 1377 to John Heron (Lansdowne MS. 326, fol. 49 b).

Robert Mauduit, living 7th July, 1358; to whom John Mauduit of Burton Leonard, in 1374, conveyed certain lands in Eshot (Dodsworth MS. 61, fol. 50).

Wyland Mauduit, living 7th July, 1358.

Wyland Mauduit, son and heir, succeeded to his father's lands at Eshot, and was seized of the same, 28th August, 1399; sold the said lands, 20th May, 1422, to Edward Bertiam (Dodsworth MS. 61, fol. 50).

Isabel, daughter of John Mauduit, second son of Robert, living 28th Aug., 1399. (Dodsworth MS. 61, fol. 50).

Agnes, mar. 1st, Richard Park of Bedlington, and 2nd, John Clough (Dodsworth MS. 61, fol. 71). Thos. Richard Park and Agnes his wife released all the right of the said Agnes (which was nothing in effect) to Edward Conyer and his wyef, and to their heires for ever. Ibid.

Before the manor and vill of Eshot were sold by Roger Mauduit to Sir John Heron, knight, in 1377, certain lands comprised in a settlement made at Burton Leonard, at Martinmas, 1374, had been given by John Mauduit to Robert Mauduit, son of Sir Roger. A recital of the settlement and the subsequent history of this property is found in a document preserved in the Dodsworth collection in the Bodleian library at Oxford.¹

First yt appeareth by a deed bearinge date at Burton Leonarde the Sunday next after the feast of Saint Martin in Winter, anno regis Edwardi iii^o xlvij^o 1374 : That one John Mauduyth of Burton Leonarde, lord of Esheyt, released to one Roberte Mauduyth, sone of Sir Roger Mauduith, knight, all the landes called Jacktaland landes lyinge at th'est ende of the towne of Essheyt in divers places. And also all the landes called Margarete landes lyinge in the said towne of Essheyt in divers places, and one flatte of erable land called Caldwell flatt in the same towne. And a flatte of erable lande called Greneknoll lyinge in the same towne on both sides the waye, with all the medowe of the sayd flatte called Caldwell medowe, and with all the medowe called brode medowe belonginge to the sayd flate, and comone of pasture for all beastes in the demayne landes of Essheyt, with fre entrye and egressse there to pasture, except the parke and close of the scyte of the manour. And that the foresaid Robert and his heyres and their tenauntes should grynde their corne growinge on the premisses at his mylne of Essheyt without payement of any mulcture.

This Robert had two sones, Wyland Mauduyth and John Mauduyth; after death of Robert, Wyland entred to the premisses and was therof seased and made a feoffment therof to William Themyllby, parson of Bothall, Richarde Marshall and Robert Pacock, which said persons re-infeoffed the sayd Wyland and Isabell his wyf in the premisses to them and to th'eires of their two bodyes lawfully begotten. And for default of such issue to the right heyres of the sayd Wyland, which deed bearyth date at Essheyt the xxvij^o daye of August in the xxij^o yere of Richard the seconde (1399).

The said Wyland Mauduyth, after death of Isabell his wyf, enfeoffed one John Paryse, vicar of Whelpington, and John Whyte, chaplayne, of the premisses, which feoffes by there deed bearinge date the xvj^o daye of January, anno domini 1419, anno septimo Henrici quinti, enfeoffed therof Water Darley, parson of Morepeth, Richard Marshall, vicar of Wodborne, and John Steale, chaplain, to them and to their heyres for evere.

The same Wyland Mauduyth by his wrytinge dated the xx^o day of May, in the yere of our Lord God 1422, enfeoffed and sold to Edward Barthram, sone of Sir John Barthram, knight, all the premisses to him and to his heyres for evere. And the said Darley and other the feoffees before named by there wrytinge bearinge date the xx^o day of June anno predicto enfeoffed and released to the sayd Edward Barthram all the premisses to his owne use, to him and to his heyres for evere.

John Horsley by his wrytinge bearinge date at Essheyt the vj^o daye of Apr. anno xij^o Henrici sexti (1435) sold unto the sayd Edward Barthram all his landes (in) Essheyt which was a cotadge and certeyne landes.

This Edward Barthram beyng seased of these landes emongest other dyed therof seased,¹ after whose death one other Edward Barthram his sone and heyre entred and was therof seased and had issue a dowghter called Jane, and of suche estate the xx^o daye of Aprill, anno xxxviii^o Henrici (VI.) 1460² seased, the sayd Jane then beyng of th'age of vij^o yeres² of one Robert Roodes of Newcastle entred and was therof seased² one Edward Conyers of Kyrkby-fletham, who had issue betweene² videlicet Margerye, Jane and Anne. And so the said Jane, the mother, of such estate dyed seased the last day of November, anno xix^o Edwardi quarti (1479), after whose death the said Edward Conyers held him in as tenaunt by the curtesy of England duringe his lyf; his dowghters and heyres were maryed, one Margery to William Mansfeld, Jane to Robert Creswell, and Anne, first to John Harbotle of Bitchfield, and after to Wm. Branesby, and had issue as appeareth in the paedegree.

One Richard Parke of Bedlington and Agnes his wief, who was dowghter to John Mauduyth, which Agnes was mother to John Clewgh, of Horsley, by there wrytinge of date the x^o of June, anno xiiij^o Edwardi iij^o 1473 relea[se]d all there right in the premisses to Edward Conyers and Jane his wyf and the heyres of the said Jane.

Mid that after the death of Jane, wyf of Edward Conyers, the sayd Conyers did lett the premisses to one John Harbotle, gentleman, for certeyne yeres payng a certeyne some, and after tooke upon

Sir John Heron conveyed his estates to Roger de Both[al] and William de Meryngton, chaplains, who, by a deed dated January 6th, 1384/5, regranted the manor of Eshot and other lands for life, remainder to his son Sir William Heron, knight; remainder to Sir Gerard Heron, knight, brother of the said William; remainder to John Heron, another son of Sir John Heron and brother of William and Gerard; remainder successively to William and Nicholas, brothers of the said Sir John Heron, with divers remainders.¹

Sir John Heron was succeeded by his eldest son, the said Sir William Heron, knight, who died October 20th, 1404, seised of the manor of Esshete, held in fee tail by the grant of William Meryngton and Roger de Bothe[F], clerks. The said manor was held of Sir John Scrope, knight, and Elizabeth his wife, as of the right of the said Elizabeth, by knight's service, as of the barony of Mitford, and was worth twenty marks yearly. Sir John Heron, knight, son of Sir John Heron, knight, and brother of the said Sir William Heron, knight, was the next heir, and was of the age of 23 years and upwards.²

The 'castrum de Eshete' is mentioned in the list of fortalices in 1415; it then belonged to Sir John Heroun, knight.³

One of the frequent controversies between the Herons and the Lises, lords of the adjacent manor of Felton, culminated in an action brought against Sir William Lisle by Roger Heron, in connection with which witnesses were examined at York, August 3rd, 1526. Causey Park-side severally deposed that, on the Good Friday previous, Sir William Lisle, talking to Roger Heron in the churchyard of Felton after service, desired him to refer the matters in dispute betwixt them to two indifferent persons or else to two men of law, but the deponents did not hear Sir William use any ill words, either of the legate (Wolsey) or of the lord warden. On the other side, John Widdrington of Widdrington, esq., aged 20 years, son-in-law of Sir William Ellerker, deposed that at Asshot field about Whitsuntide, 1525, Sir William Lisle, talking to Ellerker, who as sheriff had awarded a replevy of certain cattle wrongfully taken by Lisle from Roger Heron, said, 'By God's blood there is nother king nor his officers that shall take any distress upon my ground;' and as another witness deposed, 'or have ado within the liberties of Felton but I shall take another for it, if I be as strong as he, and can be able to make my party good.'¹

Sir William Heron of Ford died June 18th, 1535,² seised of the manor of Eschet and many other estates. He was succeeded by his granddaughter Elizabeth, afterwards wife of Thomas Carr, son of John Carr of Hetton. They, on May 16th, 1552, conveyed the manor of Eshot to John Beadnell of Lemington and Thomas Bates of Morpeth,³ apparently to secure a sum of money, the security being afterwards acquired by William, Lord Daere of Gilsland, to whom certain moneys, for the rents

Hon. William Lord Widdrington, Edward Widdrington of Felton, esq., Humphrey Mitford of Mitford, esq., and William Carr of Eatall, esq., in trust for the raising of portions for my younger children, Anne, John and Thomas, and for the payment of my debts. The residue to my eldest son, William Carr. Proved 1685.

1681, 3rd August. Will of Ann Carr of Eshett, widow. I give and bequeath all my personal estate, etc., unto my grandchildren, Anne Faulkener, widow, Charles Lisle, May Lisle, Barbury Dawson, Magdalen Lisle, and Katherine Lisle, and to Ann Lisle, eldest daughter of my grand-son, John Lisle, to be equally divided among them. I give to my daughter, Margaret Lisle of Welton, widow, £5. My nephew, William Osle of Beall, executor. Proved 1684.

Thomas Carr, having ruined himself by his extravagant expenditure, conveyed Eshot on February 8th, 1792, to Thomas Adams of Alnwick, for the sum of £34,000. The latter died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother, Alexander Adams of Newcastle and Acton, who by will dated May 12th, 1815, gave his real estate and great wealth to his natural son, William Adams, M.D., of Calcutta. Dr. Adams died in 1818, intestate as to his real estate, whereupon Eshot escheated to the Crown.¹ By an order under the sign manual, dated May 14th, 1822, the estates were sold, about 1823, and the proceeds divided amongst the children of Robert Adams of Long Houghton, Alexander Adams's heir-at-law. Eshot was purchased by John Brewis of Swarland, the husband of one of Robert Adams's daughters, and was sold in 1877 by their son, Mr. Thomas Brewis of Edinburgh, to the late Mr. Emerson Bainbridge of Newcastle, the father of Mr. Thomas H. Bainbridge, the present proprietor.

ESHOT HEUGH.

The Heugh, a small estate of 220 acres lying on the east side of the burn dividing the township of Eshot from that of Bockenfield, seems to represent the place called Hou, near Eshot, mentioned in the Assize Rolls of 1279.¹ The name does not occur again until January 26th, 1568/9,² when Thomas Bates of Morpeth conveyed two messuages or tenements in the Hughe to William Robinson of Swarland. The property so conveyed is now represented by the same estate of the Heugh, comprising about 220 acres, lying on the east side of the burn which divides the township of Eshot from that of Bockenfield. Thomas Robinson and Frances his wife, 1st January, 1666, conveyed the Heugh to William Carr of Eshot for the sum of £100.³ William Carr, the purchaser, died about 1674, being succeeded by his son of the same name. The latter, by a deed dated October 2nd, 1736, settled his estates at Eshot and Hetton, on the failure of issue of his eldest son William (which event happened), upon his third son Thomas in tail male, with remainder to other sons, to the exclusion of his second son John. The deed of entail having been found to be defective so far as it related to Eshot Heugh and the manorial rights of Hetton, the disinherited but lineal heir male, John Carr, succeeded to these properties. He died in 1756, and was succeeded by his only son, also named John. The latter died unmarried in 1775, having by will dated August 7th, 1775, made his young kinsman, 'Thomas (William) Carr, an infant son of Thomas Carr, esq.,' his sole heir,¹ who entered into possession on his majority in 1791.

* This pedigree is taken, with some additions, from The Family of Carr, vol. iii. privately printed, London, 1866.

Thomas William Carr, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and solicitor of excise, died 1829, leaving the Heugh to his eight children, who sold their respective shares to their brother-in-law, Sir Culling Eardley, who, by will, gave it in 1863 to his wife's nephew, the Rev. Thomas William Carr, rector of Barming, the present owner.¹

HELM-ON-THE-HILL.

The homestead of Helm-on-the-Hill, with some adjoining land, occupying an elevated situation of 300 feet and more above sea-level, formed an enclave or detached portion of the township of Eshot until 1887, when for poor-law purposes it was united to Bockenfield. By a charter given at Mitford on the Thursday before midsummer day, 1254, Roger Bertram of Mitford gave to William Heron, with other places, all the lands called Heyrun and woods called Helme and Elstrother. The charter is attested by Sir Nicholas de Aketon, Sir Roger Mauduit, Sir Hugh de Haysand, Sir Robert de Gamelthorp, knights, and others, and was confirmed by the king, April 23rd, 1256.²

On March 8th, 1551/2, a messuage by Causekirke, 5½ acres of arable land, 4 acres of meadow, 1 close of land lately enclosed within Bokenfeld Leez containing about 2 acres, and common of pasture in Felton, Causefeld and Helme, then in the occupation of Robert Lisle; the messuage called Helme, 4 acres of arable land, 3 acres of meadow and common of pasture within the lordship of Felton, in Causefelde and Helme, then in the occupation of Gilbert Rede, all formerly belonging to the late monastery of Brinkburn; the chapel or hermitage and parcel of land adjoining it in Causefelde and Helme, then in the occupation of William Atkynson and his wife, were, with other places, granted to Sir John Horsley of Horsley, knight.³

A messuage at the Helm was included in the parcels of Eshot, conveyed February 7th and 8th, 1792, by Thomas Carr to Alexander Adams, and continued to form part of that estate until 1878, when it was purchased by Mr. J. G. Riddell, to whose son, Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, it now belongs.

BOCKENFIELD TOWNSHIP.

The township of Bockenfield is very irregular, with an area of 2,465 acres, touching at its north-west angle the river Coquet, and bounded on the south by the chapelry of Hebburn and the parish of Long Horsley. In 1901 there was a population of 69,¹ dwelling for the most part in the scattered homesteads of Burgham, Bywell, North High Moor, South High Moor, and at Bockenfield itself.

As has been already stated in the account of Eshot, a detached portion of that township at or near Helm-on-the-Hill was added to Bockenfield in 1888. Near that place the old North Road was diverted in 1817² by a new loop road constructed on the more level ground on the west of the hill, up which the old road ascends. In the enclosure so formed, and very near to the old road, is a mound apparently artificial and probably sepulchral, of which nothing seems to be known.³

Like many of the adjoining townships Bockenfield was a member of the barony of Mitford,⁴ under which it appears to have been held in early times by local proprietors. On the morrow of St. Lawrence (August 11th), 1206, a final concord was made in the king's court at Newcastle, between William, son of Osof, and Robert de Granteleia (? Glantlees) concerning eight bovates and seventy-two acres of land in Bokinfeld. William quit-claimed all his right in the land, for which Robert granted him sixty acres of the same land, paying yearly therefor one pound of pepper on St. Cuthbert's day, for all services save foreign service.⁵ On November 20th, 1208, Alice and Agnes, daughters of Elstan, acknowledged five bovates of land in Bokenfeld to be the right of Godfrey Maudnit, who for a final concord granted them two acres of the same land.⁶ Sir Godfrey Maudnit, his son Roger, and their tenants in Bokenfield were benefactors of the prior and convent of Brinkburn. As is more fully mentioned in the account of Eshot, Godfrey granted them a toft in his vill of Bokenfeld, the grant being attested by William de Blumville, then sheriff of Northumberland.¹ This grant was confirmed in December, 1244, by Godfrey's son Roger.² It is more than probable that for some of these grants the prior and convent paid adequate sums of money, for a dispute having arisen between the prior and Sir Godfrey respecting the tithes of Bokenfield and Eshot, the matter was referred to arbitrators, who gave their award 6 Kal. June (May 26th), 1224.³ In 1244 William Blumville gave three acres and a half, lying in the same place, to the prior and convent.⁴

Half a plough land in Bokenfeld worth 50s. a year, and a cottage worth 2d. were held of Sir Roger Mauduit by William Heron, lord of Hadston, who about 1257 was succeeded by his son William, aged 18 years.⁵

The Helm is first mentioned in 1256, in a final concord made at Newcastle between William Heron, plaintiff, and Adam de Plesset (Plessey) and Aline his wife, deforciant.⁶

At the Northumberland assizes of 1256, there was a presentment that some evildoers had entered and robbed the house of Robert, pistor, of Bokenfeud of 10s.¹

William de Bokenfeld was an attesting witness to two undated charters printed in the Brinkburn Chartulary,² and his son William and his wife Alice, whose maiden name appears to have been Hirning, entered into an agreement in 1264 with the prior and convent, respecting pasture in Linchewode and West Rimside; ³ he also granted them certain lands in Framlington.⁴

William Frankelayne, son of Osolf de Bokenfeld, not later than 1266, granted an acre and a rood of land in Bokenfelde to the prior and canons of Brinkburn,⁵ who also obtained a rent charge of 2s., arising from William de Togston's lands in the place.⁶

At the assizes in 1269, Roger Maudut claimed Ralph le lorimer as his nief, born on his lands; unfortunately the lands are not particularly named, but they were probably at Bockenfield or Eshot.⁷ At the same assizes William de Blumvill brought an action to recover from Roger Maudut and Adam de Blumvill sixty acres of land, etc., in Bokenfeud, formerly belonging to Agnes de Bokenfeld.⁸ In another suit in which Master Adam de Bokenfeud was plaintiff and Walter Heyrun, defendant, respecting common of pasture in Bokenfeld, it is stated that Master Adam was son of Robert de Graunteleye (Glantlees).⁹

In 1269 Master Adam de Bokingfuld granted certain lands in Thirston to the same prior and convent,¹⁰ and in Michaelmas term, 1278, his attorney, Nicholas de Togston, brought an action against Walter Heron for common

This second William Heron of Hadston, who succeeded his father in 1257, died at Newcastle on Sunday, December 16th, 1296,³ his son Walter having died in his lifetime. Although the latter was defendant in the suits of 1278, 1282 and 1284, the inquisition taken on his death states that at that time he held no lands in Northumberland.⁴ His daughter Emeline, a child of six or seven years of age, was her grandfather's heir, it being expressly stated that 'neither William nor Walter have any other heir than Emeline while she is living.'⁵ In addition to Hadston and other estates, William Heron at the time of his death was seised of four acres of land in Bokinfeld worth 6d. an acre and also a waste place in Bokinfeld called Elstrother and Helme worth 12d. a year.⁶ Emeline Heron became the wife of John Darcy of Knayth.⁷

Edward I. being at Carlisle March 14th, 1306/7, granted to Roger Mauduyt for his services in Scotland free warren in all his demesne lands in Bockenfeld and Eshot.⁸ It is stated in an inquisition taken at Newcastle on Friday, May 15th, 1310, that Robert fitz Roger had died seised of the manor of Whalton, and that of the said manor Sir Roger Mauduyt held his manor and lands of Eshet and Bokynfeld by the service of a fourth part of a knight's fee.⁹ This finding is of course inaccurate so far as it is stated that Eshot and Bockenfield were held of the barony of Whalton.¹⁰

By a deed dated at Morpeth on the Wednesday after March 12th, 1313/4, Richard Freman of Whalton quitclaimed to the prior and convent of Brinkburn all right and claim to a toft and five acres of land with the appurtenances in the vill of Bokenfelde.²

As has been already said in the account of Felton church, an inquiry was held at Newcastle, June 25th, 1332, whether it would be to the king's damage or prejudice if he were to grant a licence to Roger Maudoit to give 100s. rent in Eshet and Bokynfeld to a chaplain to celebrate divine service daily in the church of St. Michael of Felton, for his soul and for the souls of his heirs and ancestors and of all the faithful departed. It was stated that the rent was held of Geoffrey le Escrop as of the barony of Whalton by the service of 1d. yearly. There was no mesne lord between the king and the said Roger, except the said Geoffrey who holds the barony in chief by knight service, and there remains to Roger in Esshet and Bokynfeud 100s. rent besides the said gift.³

It is not known in what way Bockenfield passed from the possession of the Mauduits to the powerful local family of Heron of Simonburn and Ford, but on April 21st, 1340, William Heron, who is described as 'dilectus vallettus,' for his services in Scotland and elsewhere, obtained a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands at 'Bokenfeld and Heyroun,' Ford, Crookham, Kimmerston, Hethpool, Espley and Fenrother, together with licence to crenellate his dwelling-house or castle at Ford.⁴

⁴ Charter Roll, 14 Edw. III. No. 29. The grant is recited and confirmed in Pat. Rolls, 36 Edw. III pt. ii. memb. 11.

During the course of the fourteenth century Bockenfield seems to have been given as a provision for a younger son of the Herons of Ford, whose descendants may possibly have also owned Meldon. The pedigree of Heron of Meldon is not well ascertained,¹ but Nicholas Heron owned a tower there in 1415.² He may perhaps be identified with the 'Nicholas Heron, lord of Bokenfeld,' of whom William Mitford, who died March 7th, 1422/3, held in Bokenfeld in socage three messuages, eighty acres of land, and one acre of meadow.³ John Mitford, son of the said William Mitford, was born April 8th, 1402, and about the year 1423⁴ delivered to Nicholas Heron, esq., of Meldon, in the presence of the abbot of Newminster, certain writings respecting Meldon, Riplington, Bockenfield, etc.⁵ Lionel Heron, who in 1422 presented the following petition to the king, has not been identified.

A tresreuerent pier en Dieu et tresgracious seigneur leuesque de Duresme Chauceller Dengleterre (1422).

A messuage and lands in Bokenfeld and Longraw formerly belonging to the monastery of Brinkburn were granted June 29th, 1541, for a sum of money to Robert Thornehill of Walkingham, Notts, esq., and Leonard Warcopp, alias Carthill, to hold of the king as of the manor of Epworth in Lincolnshire by fealty in free socage, paying yearly for the premises together with other premises at Hartford Bridge and at 'Keymeffeld' 3s. 2d.⁷

The Knights Hospitallers also held a parcel of land in Bockenfield, which in 1550, after the dissolution of the religious houses, was stated to produce 12d. a year.¹ These lands were mentioned in the letters patent of Philip and Mary reconstituting the order in 1558.²

In 1552 John Heron of Bockenfield was appointed one of the commissioners for enclosures upon the middle marches for the district 'from the sea to the streyte between Cokett and Wandesbeck.'³

Four tenants from Bockenfield presented themselves at the muster taken on the Moot-law, March 26th, 1580.⁴

As has been already explained in the account of Thirston, the tract of open ground called Bockenfield moor was intercommoned by the tenants of Bockenfield, Thirston, Felton, and some other places. Before its enclosure it was a fertile source of dissension and acrimonious quarrels amongst the intercommoners.

On June 14th, 1592, John Heron of Bokenfield entered into a bond with Henry, earl of Northumberland, under a penalty of £80, that 'the above abounden John Heron his heirs and assigns att all tymes hereafter shall and wyll without any willinge or wyttinge disturbance permitt and suffer all and everye the nowte tenantes of the said earle in Thirston in the countye of Northumberland and such as shalbe tenentes hereafter to the said earle his heirs or assigns there to have use and take comon of pasture for all maner of catle which theye and everye of them shall kepe and susteyn in or upon their tenements and landes in Thirstone aforesaid parcell of th'enherytaunce of the said earle in and upon the moore called Bokenfield moore and the ground called Elstrother, nere Thirstone aforesaid.'⁵

The earl writing from Petworth on the following July 31st, says :

My good Coosen, I have recevid your letters, by the consideration whearof I understand your kynd care of my affayrs in those partes, for which I geve you right hartie thankes and will your continuance theirow accordingly. Touchinge Heron, I will advise with my counsayle, and heareafter asserten you. Touchinge my deternynation therein for my tenantes of Newburne, I meane to further and countinace them accordinge to equitie to my uttermost. The injuries offred me and my tenantes bie Heron of Bockinfelde I will accordinge to law reforme, and requit to the exampell of others my oppressors. The want of apparence of my freehowlders att my knight courts I will bothe loock unto and reforme as it behoweth me.⁶

was his son Richard Heron, then thirty-six years of age. Bockenfield was alleged to be held of the king in capite by knight's service, but it was pleaded in chancery that it was held of the castle and manor of Mitford by fealty and a cornage rent.

On May 21st, 1639, the army of Charles I., on its way to Berwick, rested for the night 'on a moore neere Felton called Bockingfeild moore.' The disposition of the troops on that occasion is shown in Hollar's print, reproduced in the first volume of this work (p. 400). Leslie's troops seem to have rested at the same place in the middle of August, 1640.¹

On the 29th January, 1660/1, there was a muster on Bockenfield moor of 'one hundred and twenty-six gentlemen volunteeiers (besides their servants) all bravely armed and hors'd, led by the Right Honourable and truly loyal William Lord Widdrington, governor of Berwick.'²

In 1663 Bokenfeld was rated to Richard Hearon, esq., at £200 per annum.³

EVIDENCES TO HERON PEDIGREE.

1549, 6th October. Will of Margaret Heron of Bokynfeld. To be buried in the churchyard of Felton. My four children, John Heron, Margaret Atkyson, Elenor Atkyson and Esobel Heron. My son John Heron to be in custody of his uncle Anthony Heron. John Heron of Bokynfeld, esq., supervisor. Raine, Test. Dunelm

1610, 30th March. Administration of the personal estate of John Heron of Winteridge, parish of Felton, granted to Frances, his wife. John, Robert, Thomas, Humphrey, Brian and Jane Heron, the children, being under age. Ibid.

1665, 18th May. Will of Richard Heron of Bockenfield, esq. My eldest daughter Barbara, now wife of Mr. Robert Johnson of Newcastle, £100. My second daughter Jane, wife to William Carr of Eshett, esq. My son John executor. Proved 1665. Ibid.

1707, 27th September. Will of Robert Heron of Newark-on-Trent, gent. Although I am the lineal heir male of the family of the Herons of Bockenfield in Northumberland, I mention not this of any ostentation, but that my deare son may understand that in case my Lady Hotham or Madam Dawney, the two only daughters and children of John Heron, esq., of Bockenfield, and after of Beverley, where he dyed, shall dye without issue, that he is the next heir after me (the said John Heron and me being brother's sons) to all such estates as descended to the said Lady Hotham and her sister from their said father as by many letters from them, their father, my uncle, and others may appear, which are in a bundle in my desk and worthy to be carefully preserved; and also by the Heralds' Office, for when the said John Heron was High Sheriffe of Northumberland issued out his patent, etc., and being with him at Newcastle, he introduced me to Nonoy King-at-Arms, he then keeping his office there, he caused my name and my son's, being then an infant, to be entered in the said office and paid the fees. Yet I desire no sutchens or any great pomp or ceremonie to be used at my obsequies, for great charges upon such occasion can be no benefit to the dead but an injury to the living, therefore to be avoided. I declare myself to be a true member of the Protestant Reformed Religion, looking upon it to be the soundest in its doctrines, and the most innocent in its discipline and ceremonies of any religion in the world and the freest from all error, heresy and hypocrisy of any other what-soever, therefore I do earnestly exhort my deare children and others that may be influenced by my counsell never to desert it for any per-secution or extremity what-soever, either in the public profession or private practice thereof; and I take monarchy to be the best government and that this nation will never be happy or easy under any other, as hath been sufficiently experienced. My lands, etc., in Newark, Fandon, Fledbro', Woodcoates, Stirrup Noney and Oldwater (?), to my son John Heron for life, then to Robert his son and his heirs male. Elizabeth and Jane, my son's daughters, £50 each, and to the two younger £40 each. My daughter Clarke and Mr. Thomas Clarke her husband and their children Charles, Mary, Robert and Anne. My son, my grandson and Mr. John Hobman, executors. My nephew Roger Molineux the mute. Proved 1st May, 1713. Raine, Test. Ebor.

1731, 24th December. Will of John Heron of Newark-upon-Trent, gentleman. My messuages, etc., in Newark and all my lands, etc., to my sister Hynde and my nephew John Heron, son of my brother Mr. Thomas Heron, deceased. My personal estate to my brother and sister Hynde, my nephew Mr. Edmund Hynde and my cousin Mr. Robert Heron in trust for my daughter (a minor). My brother's children, my mother, Mrs. Mary Pocklington. Proved 12th September, 1732. Ibid.

1741, 15th August. Will of Jane Heron of Newark-upon-Trent, widow and executrix of John Heron of Newark, esq. To be buried in Newark church in the grave of my husband. My daughter Tayler. My son Robert Heron and his wife. My son Heron's six children, John, Thomas, Robert, Elizabeth and Jane. I give my son the pictures of his grandfather, father and brother Crayle. My daughter Foster £1,800. My daughters Brechnoch and Stow. My son executor. Proved 8th April, 1743. Ibid.

1753, 1st February. Will of Robert Heron of Newark-on-Trent, esq. My house in Newark to my wife, with use of furniture, plate, etc., remainder to my eldest son, John Heron, esq. My manors, etc., to the use of my son John Heron and his heirs male, remainder to my son Thomas, remainder to my son Robert, remainder to my son Richard, Margaret, my son John's wife. My daughters Rastall and Sykes. Residue to my son John, he executor. Mr. Joseph Sykes, who married my daughter Jane, their marriage articles dated 30th September, 1751. Ibid.

1764, 13th January. Will of Elizabeth Heron of Newark-upon-Trent, widow. To my son Robert Heron, clerk, £40. To my son Richard Heron, esq., £40. My son and daughter Rastall; my son and daughter Sikes; my grand-daughters Elizabeth and Margaret Heron, daughters of my late son John Heron, esq., deceased. My nieces Mrs. Brechnoch Freeman and Miss Ann Brechnoch. I desire to be buried in the parish church of We-thorough near unto my late husband, Robert Heron, esq., and that my corpse may be carried by six of mine, or my son's tenants. Residue to my son Thomas Heron, esq., he executor. Proved 4th June, 1765. Ibid.

The small but extremely quaint seventeenth-century manor house of the Herons is a narrow building with a frontage of sixty feet to the south, and has a central doorway with two three-light windows on either side. Between the windows and on the external angles of the house are flat pilasters of v jointed ashlar courses, which terminate above a cable moulding in a carved finial. The doorway is flanked by columns worked in spiral form, which support a curved pediment enclosing a shield, helmet and mantling, the former bearing the arms of Heron: gules, a chevron between three herons argent. All the windows were originally of the same design, being of three lights with transoms, and enclosed by an architrave formed of an unusual bobbin-like ornament. In the interior is a spacious staircase, with turned wood balusters, but there is little else of interest. The surface of the adjoining land is very uneven, and indicates buried foundations of considerable buildings.

On August 8th, 1672, John Heron, then residing at Beverley, for the sum of £4,500 conveyed to Edward Widdrington of Felton-hall, esq.,

the manor of Bokenfield, the messuages called Wintricke, Burgham, East and West Bywell, Pigdon's Close, Helmeside, the Hengh¹ and the water corn-mill there, Gillpeth and Pages Crooke.² As has been already stated in the account of Felton, Dorothy, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Horsley, married for her second husband Edward Widdrington; their grandson, Edward Horsley Widdrington, September 3rd, 1717, being then residing at Long Horsley, as a Roman Catholic registered his estate at Bockenfield: Bockenfield demesne and the Long Close, £120 per annum; Wintrick, £35 per annum; Hengh mill, £26 per annum; Bywell, £70 per annum; Burgham, £45 per annum; the High moor, Bywell field and the North close, partly in Felton and partly in Bockenfield, £110; a messuage or tenement called Helm-on-the-Hill, £25; Tods-loning-end, £15.³

Mr. Widdrington subsequently, on May 18th, 1737, mortgaged Bokenfield, Long Close, Bywell, Burgham, Wintrick, Hengh, etc., to William Bacon of Newton Cap, to secure £4,000.⁴

The estate for over two hundred years has followed the devolution of Felton and now belongs to Mr. Cuthbert Riddell.

ACTON AND OLD FELTON TOWNSHIP.

The combined townships of Acton and Old Felton comprise 1,400 acres, and to this two detached portions of Felton township, containing 127 acres, were added in 1888. Acton abuts on the river Coquet, opposite Acklington Park, and contains two mansion houses called Acton hall and Acton house, and the homesteads, etc., of Low Acton, Old Felton, Lanehead and Rushycap. The population in 1901 was 76.⁵

A member of the barony of Mitford, Acton was acquired apparently in the twelfth century by the family of Morwick of Morwick, barons of Chevington, who seem to have held, not immediately of the lord of the fee, but as socage tenants of the Herons of Hadston.

Richard de Morwyk, in the early part of the thirteenth century, confirmed to the convent of Brinkburn all the land in Aketon field held by the canons of that house in the time of his father and ancestors.¹

His son Sir Nicholas de Aketon, knight, whose name occurs in Testa de Nevill as holding Acton² in socage of the barony of Mitford, granted to the prior and canons of Brinkburn in December, 1242, half an acre of land in his 'culture' or flat in Aketon field on the east side of the well (of Upper Felton) and next to the land granted them by his father; he also gave them another half-acre in the lower part of the field lying between his 'culture' and the spring.³ This Nicholas de Acton is mentioned in an inquisition taken in 1258 at Causey Park on the death of William Heron of Hadston as holding the vill of Aketon by the service of 13s. 4d. yearly.⁴

Apparently he died before 1279, when Richard de Aketon⁵ was presented at the Northumberland assizes because, being in the possession of land worth £20 per annum, he had not taken upon himself the rank or dignity of knighthood.⁶ Although not mentioned in the Subsidy Roll of 1296 under Acton, possibly because he had migrated to Newcastle, in an

Henry de Haketon, Hugh and William of Hazon (an adjoining township), and certain other persons were accensed in 1312 by the prior of Tynemouth of having entered his liberty of Bewick and of carrying off and impounding at Alnwick 440 wethers.² Seven years later Henry de Acton was at law with Hugh of Hazon respecting lands at Hazon.³

Henry de Acton was succeeded by Nicholas, who in one of the Brinkburn charters expressly styles himself his son and heir.⁴ He was appointed comptroller of customs at Berwick and of the Exchange by letters patent, June 12th, 1315.⁵

A pardon was granted February 20th, 1333/4, on the petition of Richard de Acton of Newcastle, to Hugh de Carliol and John de Stannington, chaplains, for entering without licence upon the manor of Whittington, said to be held in chief, whereof the said Richard had enfeoffed them that they should regrant the same to him to hold for his life, with successive remainders to Nicholas his son and Alice, daughter of Thomas de Carliol, and the heirs of their bodies, to Matilda, daughter of Richard de Emeldon, and the heirs begotten of the body of Richard, son of Richard de Acton, etc.⁶

RICHARD 'DE AKETON vel de Morwyc' (assumed to be the second son of Hugh de = Morwick II, who died before 1242); gave lands at Acton to the prior and convent of Brinkburn (Brinkburn Chart., pp. 33, 35. Cf. Northumberland, vol. v. p. 350).

Sir Nicholas de Aketon, knight, held Acton in socage of the barony of Mitford early in the thirteenth century (Vesta de Nevill, p. 216), and High Leam of the Lady Sibilla de Morwick by the twentieth part of a knight's fee (Hodgson, pt. ii, vol. i. p. 164); in December, 1242, gave lands in Acton to the prior and convent of Brinkburn (Brinkburn Chartulary, p. 34); mentioned in Pipe Rolls in 1237 and 1256 (Hodgson, pt. iii, vol. iii, pp. 181, 184, 230); living, 1256 (Assize Rolls, p. 66).

Richard de Aketon, a witness to Adam de Bockenfield's charter in 1209 (Brinkburn Chartulary, p. 41); presented in 1279 for not taking upon him the order of knighthood (Assize Rolls, p. 325); did service for Acton in 1207 to William Heron (Ing. p.m., 25. Edw. I. No. 25), and was an attesting witness in 1206 to an Evenwood charter (Brinkburn Chartulary, p. 25).

Roger de Aketon, a monk at Newminster in 1279 (Assize Rolls, p. 220).

Henry de Aketon was accused by the prior of Tynemouth, in 1312, of having raided his lands at Bewick = (Northumberland, vol. v. p. 462), and was party to suits in 1310-1320 (Ibid., p. 462).

Nicholas de Aketon, son and heir of Henry de Aketon, in 1347 confirmed the grants made to the prior and convent of Brinkburn by his ancestors Richard (de Aketon) and Nicholas, his son (Brinkburn Chartulary, p. 35); appointed comptroller of Berwick in 1315 (Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1313-1317, p. 299); owner of lands in Acton in 1330 (Subsidy Rolls).

* The seal of William Acton of Newcastle, 1342, is round, 1 inch diameter; enclosed within a circle, not on a shield, a cross between four lions rampant. ✠ s' WILLELM' DE ACTON. It is attached to a deed in the possession of the Rev. William Greenwell, printed in vol. iv, of this work, pp. 401-402. These arms suggest a connection with the family of Carhol, who bore argent a cross between four lions rampant gules (Papworth). According to the Carr MS. (Tong's Visitation, Suit. Soc. No. 41, p. lv.) the arms of Lawrence Acton, mayor of Newcastle, in 1432 were argent, a salire gules, and a chief sable, charged with three bezants. The salire suggests a comparison with the arms of Morwick of Morwick, from whom the Actons descend (cf. vol. v, of this work, p. 350).

† Maud, widow of Richard de Acton, and her second husband, Edmund de Selby, were both living February 18th, 1345/6. Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1345-1348, p. 106.

After this period little is known of Acton. The service of 13s. 4d. rendered to the Herons in 1258 and 1297 was still paid to their successor, John Darcy of Knayth, in 1373.¹ The Actons in the direct line probably either failed or ended in an heiress, but a branch, or cadet line, having accumulated great wealth by trading in Newcastle and having obtained extensive estates in the county either by purchase or marriage, carried on the name until the middle of the fifteenth century, when Eleanor, daughter and heiress of Lawrence de Acton, became wife of Sir Ralph Percy, slain at the battle of Hedgely moor in 1464. Her Northumberland estates appear to have come to Johanna, wife of Thomas Rokeby, circa 3 Henry V.² Christopher Rokeby sold Acton, February 26th, 1579/80, to the earl of Northumberland.³

Four tenants of Acton town appeared at a muster taken on the Moot-law, March 26th, 1580,⁴ and a survey made about 1585 mentions that the old bastle house was ruinous or ruined.⁵

Acton Vill. The towne of Acton was late in the possessions of Xpofer Rookeby, esquire, and of him purchased by my lorde about the . . . yere of Elizabeth, the quenes majestie that nowe is, and bycause it was soe nighe adjoyninge to his lordship's parke of Acklington and that the deare of the said parke did commonly lye in the said groundes in the woodde called middle woodd, and for that also ther is upon the groundes of the same towneshippe very good stoare of wooddes and underwooddes wherof his lordship and his tenauntes had great neede, it is also envyroned and joyned to his lordship on thre partes, for which causes yt was thought so necessary to be purchased and adjoyned to his lands of the lordship of Alnewick and Warkwothe, and not to be severed from the same. It is holden of the castle of Metforde and hathe libertie of commone of the waistes and commons of that lordship with the townshippes of bothe Feltons, Swarland, Framlington, Ousgarthes, the Frythe, Glantleys and the Greues, even to the west syde of Newton Dykes.

There is the scyte of a mannor where the mannor house hathe bene in aunyente tyme, but now it is devyded in closes emongest the tenauntes, and the demayne landes not knownen in any parte, but all occupied in tenementes as followeth:

By indenture dated July 2nd, 1588, Henry, earl of Northumberland, conveyed the manor of Acton and all his lands there with all the lands at Little Felton and Thirston, which his father had purchased from Christopher Rookeby and John Rookeby his son, to Anthony Felton, who is described as of Great Felton, gent.² On January 31st, 1589/90, Anthony Felton conveyed the north part or moiety of Acton to John Lisle, who is described as 'of Acton, gent.'³

The latter held the rectory of Kirkharle either in fee or in lease; at a visitation held at Morpeth, June 17th, 1607, he was presented, because the church and chancel were in utter ruin.⁴ He continued on ill terms with the ecclesiastical authorities and proceedings in the chancery (at Durham) were in 1614 promoted against him by John Cradock, archdeacon of Northumberland, for 'complotteinge' with other persons and 'by speeches

The respondent filed his reply July 8th, and stated he 'did at noe time saie, give forth in speaches, devise or complott any matter or thing which might impeach, impugne or detract from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon.'¹

By a settlement dated August 8th, 1629, on the occasion of his son Edward's marriage with Mary, daughter of Sir Matthew Forster of Adderston, John Lisle limited Acton to his said son and his heirs. The estate comprised 328 acres. Edward Lisle² had no sons, but left three daughters his co-heiresses: Katherine, wife of Thomas Ogle, Jane, wife of Robert Manners of Framlington, and Dorothy, wife of John Grey of Howick.³ He was rated for Acton and Old Felton in 1663 at £160 per annum.⁴

The information of Robert Richardson of Acton, yeoman, taken before William Ogle of Causey Park, esq., one of His Majestie's justices of the peace for the county of Northumberland at this present Easter Sessions, A.D. 1681.

This informant saith that upon 2 Feb. last past in the afternoon, Mr. Justice Collingwood of Little Ryell, together with John Lisle of Leamenton hill-head, in the aforesaid county, gentleman: Robert Unthank of Unthank, gent.: William Unthank of the same place, gent.: and William Lysle of Elyhaugh, in the aforesaid county, gent., came into the house of this informant and called for ale as soon as they sat downe: and a little while after the aforesaid John Lisle desired Mr. Justice Collingwood to take notice he was in possession of this informant's house before sunsett, and that he would keep it till Whitsuntide, swearing by several prostrations (sic) that he, the above-named John Lisle, would drive away all this informant's goods the next morning, and that this informant should not have the libertie to go to the doore, and in the presence of Mr. Justice Collingwood the above-mentioned John Lisle [laid] his hand upon his sword and declared he could with that sword cleave a man from 'head to breeches.' Towards the evening Mr. Justice Collingwood went away, leaving the aforesaid John Lisle, Robert Unthank and William Lisle in this informant's house. Mrs. Katherine Ogle, wife of Thomas Ogle of Old Felton, gent., a little after Mr. Collingwood was gone, being about the hours of 7 or 8 by the clocke att night, came into this informant's house, where she found John Lisle's sword lying on the table, demanding the reason of the sword lying there, upon which Robert Unthank in a great fury rose upp and drew his sword and swore he would runn her throu (sic) and made two passes att her, and she going aside this informant runns and grasped the said Robert Unthank in his armes and endeavoured to secure the sword to prevent danger that might happen to Mrs. Ogle, and by that means this informant gott three of his fingers cutt, then this informant and the said Robert Unthank went to the door together, whereupon they were both shutt out of doors: John Lisle, coming out of the stable, swore in the presence of Robert Unthank that if they would not lett them both in to the house again he would fire the house of this informant.

Warrants were issued for the apprehension of John Lisle of Leamenton-hill-head and Robert Unthank of Unthank.'

By a settlement dated March 9th, 1660, Edward Lisle limited North Acton and lands in Old Felton to his daughter Jane, wife of Robert Manners. Her son Edward Manners¹ died July 19th, 1726, and his son John Manners, who died June 30th, 1739, left four daughters only, with much debt. A decree of the Court of Chancery ordered his estate to be sold, and an Act of Parliament, 19 Geo. II., was obtained to give a valid conveyance.² The estate of North Acton and part of Old Felton, consisting of 430 acres, was purchased by Edward Archbold of Cawledge park, Alnwick, for £5,000, and was conveyed to him by deed dated June 3rd, 1746.

On October 6th, 1780, John Archbold³ conveyed his estate to trustees for sale, and they, in 1781, sold it to Robert Lisle of Weldon for £9,420 and an annuity of £60 per annum, payable to John Archbold and his wife. The mansion of North Acton, or Acton house, as it is now called, was considerably enlarged by the purchaser, who made it his chief residence. It now belongs to his descendant, Mr. Beresford Lisle.

The other moiety, or south part, of the town and manor of Acton was conveyed May 12th, 1600, by Anthony Felton and Margaret his wife and John Felton their son and heir-apparent, to the above-named Edward Lisle. He by deed dated March 20th, 1665, limited the same to his daughter Dorothy, wife of John Grey of Howick. On August 6th, 1682, Dorothy Grey, being then a widow, in consideration of £1,500, conveyed all her lands in Acton to Edward Adams¹ of Longhoughton, gent. They descended to his son Benjamin Adams,² whose son Alexander Adams of Newcastle, by his will dated May 12th, 1815, devised his great estates to his natural son, Dr. William Adams, then in the province of Bengal, who having died October 24th, 1818, unmarried and, so far as his realty was concerned, intestate, the property became an escheat to the Crown.³

The king, by warrant, granted South Acton, or Acton hall, as it is now generally called, to Thomas Adams of Longhoughton, who was heir-at-law of Alexander Adams.⁴ He was killed by a fall from his horse, June 19th, 1822, and the property devolved upon his brother William Adams, whose granddaughter, Mrs. Robert S. Douglas, is the present proprietress.⁵

OLD FELTON.

The hamlet of Old Felton, now a single homestead, lies a few yards east of the north post road, which divides its lands into two portions, that lying to the west side of the road belonging to Mr. Cuthbert Riddell of Felton, and that to the east side to Mr. Beresford Lisle.

A church and vill had probably existed on the north bank of the Coquet at Felton from soon after, if not before, the Norman Conquest, and it may be inferred that the vill lying over a mile to the north of the church town, called in the records Upper Felton, Little Felton, but more generally Old Felton, is of yet earlier origin.

⁴ For a pedigree of Adams of Acton and Longhoughton, see vol. ii. of this work, pp. 388-389.

The priory of Brinkburn, founded in the reign of Henry I. (1100-1135) by William Bertram I. of Mitford, was enriched by the gift, from his grandson, Sir William Bertram II., of a moiety of a land once held by Eudo de Scauceby in Uner Felton, and in the same charter William confirmed a grant of four acres of land in the same place made by the said Eudo de Scauceby.¹

Although the editor of the Brinkburn Chartulary, in which the charter is printed, has read the qualifying 'Uner' as signifying 'Under' Felton, that is, the church-town, or Great Felton, it is evident that the correct rendering is 'Uver,' 'Over' or 'Upper,' for in the charter of confirmation granted by Henry II. (1154-1191), amongst the donations made by the Bertrams, and set out in the text, is that described as thirty-two acres of land in Upper Felton,² and also in the confirmation granted by King John at Hexham, February 19th, 1200/1, in which a parcel of the land is described as a moiety of the land held by Eudo de Scauceby³ in tofts and crofts in Upper Felton and another parcel as land in Upper Felton given by Ralph de Scauceby.⁴

By a series of four undated charters, probably of the end of the twelfth or beginning of the thirteenth century, Ralph de Scauceby granted to the prior and convent or to the 'domus' of Brinkburn, certain parcels of land in Over or Upper Felton. He was also a witness to other charters.⁵

A carucate of land in Upper (Superior) Felton was given to the prior and convent by William Bertram;¹ and Godfrey Mauduit, by a charter executed in the presence of Philip, bishop of Durham, Robert fitz Roger, Eustace de Vesey, Roger Bertram and many others, granted them land in Upper (Superior) Felton, with the crofts and tofts thereto pertaining,² the grant being confirmed by Godfrey's son Roger Mauduit in December, 1244.³ About 1240 the prior and convent held the whole vill of Little Felton, except 40 acres, in alms and did no service.⁴

William Scauceby, in March, 1242, granted to the prior and convent a marsh below the spring at Upper Felton,⁵ and at the same time William, son of Roger, son of Pagan, made a similar grant.⁶ The services of these two men, who were called his freemen, were excepted when Roger Bertram granted all his land in the vill of Little Felton to the prior and convent.⁷

In an agreement made on the Tuesday after May 6th, 1256, between the prior and convent of Brinkburn on the one part and Roger Bertram of Mitford and Robert de Gamelthorpe on the other part respecting common of pasture in the park of Felton and other matters in dispute, Roger Bertram's tenants in Great and Little Felton are expressly mentioned.⁸ The spring at Upper Felton is mentioned in a charter of 1347.⁹

About the 15th October, 1537, John Patenson of Old Felton (who is called a suspicious vagabond) came to St. Robert's, near Knaresborough, and began to disclose such seditious reports that the 'minister of the house' there caused him to be brought before the President and Council of the North, sitting at York.

Patenson confessed or deposed that friar Robert Ashton was lodged at his father's house on Tuesday last and other divers nights, and desired him to commend him to the brethren of St. Robert's: that my lord Lumley lies at Hull Park at the Friars and the said friar Ashton is his chaplain, and sometimes is in harness and rides to baron Hilton's, and two or three men of Beverley wait on him. Also that many of them that were fled to Scotland had returned, and lay about Hull Park and Alnwick. That one Arthur Percy came from France to Berwick with seven ships and is now with lord Lumley at Hull Park. That the commons of Scotland had risen with the outlaws of England against their king, and had driven him to a hold and intended to "pyne" him. That one Dixon, a Scotchman dwelling in England near the borders, having a coll blakk here (coal black hair), of the age of forty, with a white face, met him at Alnwick, in the house of one Strother, on Monday fortnight, gave him a groat and desired him to bruit the premises abroad in England. Patenson's story was discredited, and his malice being proved, he was committed to prison and afterwards at the oyer terminer was indicted, arraigned, and executed for treason.¹

OLD FELTON. SURVEY OF 1585.²

John Browne holds at will of the lord one messuage with garden and small close of 1 rood, one croft adjoining the said messuage, not enclosed, of 3 acres, lands in the fields, of 4 acres arable land in various places, and several pasture for [blank] beasts, with common of pasture belonging to the said messuage. Rent. 5s. Fine in 1585, 40s.

At the muster taken on Clifton field, November 24th, 1595, for Castle and Morpeth wards, Robert Carr of Old Failton was scheduled as being present but as defective.³

A 'messuage and tenement called Felton Parva within the parish of Felton Nova,' belonging to the dissolved monastery of Brinkburn, with all the lands belonging to and leased with the tenement to James Carr, of the clear yearly value of 40s., were granted January 26th, 1544/5, to Sir William Eure, knight, Lord Eure, to hold in tail male of the king in chief by the service of a tenth part of a knight's fee and paying yearly 4s.⁴

The premises seem to have reverted to the Crown, for by letters patent issued July 1st, 1615, after reciting the grant to Lord Eure in 1545, they were given to Sir James Stonehowse, knight, and William Jorden, both of Wandsworth, Surrey, to hold of the king in chief by the services due and accustomed and paying yearly 4s.⁵

The later descent of Old Felton cannot be traced with the same precision as that of Acton. It was the portion of Edward Acton's estates allocated to his third daughter, Katherine, wife of Thomas Ogle. Thomas Ogle of Old Felton voted at the election of knights of the shire in 1715, but before April 18th, 1720, it had come, in whole or in part, into the hands of John Lisle of Elyhaugh, who by his will of that date limits his lands at Elyhaugh and Old Felton to his daughter Elizabeth, with remainders over. Under these provisions it descended to Robert Lisle of Newcastle, who in 1766 suffered a recovery; he voted for Old Felton at the election of knights of the shire in 1774. In 1798 Old Felton was sold by the above-named Robert Lisle or by another of the same name, the portion west of the turnpike, comprising 215 acres, being conveyed to Alexander Davison of Swarland, and that to the east to Robert Lisle of Acton,¹ since which time these parcels have been merged in the Swarland and Acton estates respectively.

ELYHAUGH TOWNSHIP.

The township of Elyhaugh, comprising 281 acres, is divided into two unequal parts by the Coquet, the larger portion with the homestead lying on the left or northern bank of the river. There is an interesting old mansion house, built in 1737 by Thomas and Elizabeth Lisle, protected by well-grown forest trees. The windows are enriched with moulding and over the door is a shield armorial, Lisle impaling Lisle. In 1901 there was a population of nineteen.¹

PANEL OVER THE DOOR AT ELYHAUGH.

The township of Elyhaugh probably owes its existence to the operation of the Poor Law Act of Charles II., previous to which it may have been comprised in Felton, for it is unnoticed in the early records.

A cadet branch of the Lisles was seated at Elyhaugh as far back as 1549, when Thomas Lisle of Elyhaugh purchased lands in Hazon from Roger Tocket of Tocket.²

From the torn and mutilated records of a suit in chancery in 1595 concerning Elyhaugh, the following details can be gleaned. Robert Lysley of Felton, the complainant, stated that as son and heir of his father he was seised of a mansion house, messuage or tenement called Heyhaughe, when, about the year 1572-1573, being in service at court and attendant on the earl of Sussex, then lord president of the North, and being young and in need of money, he granted a lease for twenty-one years to his cousin-german, Robert Lisley of Haysande, who had 'repaired to London and with offers of money earnestly entreated' for the same. The lease, dated July 10th, 15 Eliz. [1573], was granted to Lancelot Lisley of Hasande, brother of the said Robert Lyle of Hasand, 'because himself then stood in some danger about the suspicion of killing one Heron.' Robert Lisle of Felton seems to have been unable to recover possession of the demised premises on the expiration of the lease, although he desired to grant them to his own brother, John Lisle, for the term of his life.³ Robert Lisle of Felton was ultimately successful, for Elyhaugh is included in the settlement of his estates, made January 17th, 1595/6.⁴

EVIDENCE TO LISLE PEDIGREE.

7th December, 1756. Will of John Lisle of Morpeth. I give my dwelling-house at Morpeth to my wife Elizabeth Lisle for life, and after her death I give the same to my son Robert Lisle. To my daughter Mary Lisle £1,000. Proved at Durham, 1760. Mr. John Tate's Abstract of Title.

12th May, 1792. Will of Robert Lisle of Newcastle, at present residing at West Denton. I give my household goods to my wife, except my bookcase and library, which I give to my nephew Robert Lisle Coulson. I give all my lands, etc., to my friends, Robert Carr of Elyhaugh, esq., Thomas Youngusband of Tuggal Hall, esq., and William Row of Newcastle, merchant, in trust to pay the income of the estate to my wife for her life and then to be equally divided amongst my nephews and nieces, Robert Lisle Coulson, William Coulson, Jane Coulson and Margaret Coulson, share and share alike. My nephew John Blenkinsop Coulson is already amply provided for by his late uncle, John Blenkinsop Coulson of Jesmond, esq., deceased. Ibid.

In 1663 John Lisle was rated for Elyhaugh at £25 per annum,¹ and the place is described by Warburton, about 1715, as 'the seat of Lisle, gent., pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Coquet in a vale surrounded by a thick wodd.'²

18 April, 1729. Will of John Lisle of Elyhaugh, gent. I give my messuages, lands, etc., at Elyhaugh, Old Felton and New Felton to my daughter Elizabeth Lisle for life, subject to the payment of my debts, annuities and legacies; and because I am extremely desirous that the estates should continue in the family of Lisle, who have for many generations enjoyed the same, I injoin' and earnestly entreat my said daughter to marry and take to husband Robert, the eldest son of my late friend, Robert Lisle of Weldon, esq., or any other son of the said Robert Lisle; remainder to her issue. Remainder to the sons of my sister Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Lisle of Weldon; remainder to my natural son John Lisle and his issue; remainder to my natural daughters Katherine Lisle and Ann Lisle; remainder to Robert Lisle, eldest son and heir of Robert Lisle, late of Weldon, esq., deceased, and his heirs male; remainder to William, second son of the said Robert Lisle, deceased, and his heirs male; remainder to George Lisle, youngest son of Robert Lisle, deceased; remainder to Robert Lisle, son of Thomas Lisle, late of Newton-on-the-Moor, gent., deceased; remainder to John Lisle, son of William Lisle, late of Long Framlington, gent., deceased. I give to my wife £10 per annum over and above her jointure. I give 20s. per annum to my sister Elizabeth Lisle. I give £10 per annum to Dorothy Lisle of Hazon, the mother of my three natural children. I give 40s. per annum to Frances Lisle of Weldon and 40s. per annum to Dorothy Lisle of Long Horsley. I give to my natural son John Lisle £200, and to my natural daughters Katherine and Ann Lisle £150 apiece. To Ann, one of the daughters of Robert Lisle of Weldon, £40.³

Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Lisle, died unmarried in 1723, and possession of the estate was obtained by her father's sister Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Lisle of Weldon, who alleged the invalidity of the will.⁴ The matter was compromised, and a deed dated January 31st, 1737/8, secured Elyhaugh and part of Old Felton to Thomas⁵ and Elizabeth for their joint lives and the life of the longer liver, the reversion of these lands with immediate possession of the other part of Old Felton being given to John Lisle, natural son and devisee of John Lisle, the testator of 1720.⁶

Robert Lisle of Newcastle, hostman, and of West Denton, having sold Old Felton in 1798 to Robert Lisle of Acton and Weldon and to Alexander Davison of Swarland, by his will dated May 12th, 1792, gave Elyhaugh to his wife for her life and then to his nephew and nieces.

The estate was sold under a decree of the Court of Chancery, made May 31st, 1816,⁷ and was then acquired by Nicholas Temperley of

SWARLAND TOWNSHIP.

The township of Swarland comprises 2,211 acres, to which in 1888 were added, under the provisions of the Local Government Act of that year, two detached portions of the township of Felton containing 236 acres. It contains the homesteads of Overgrass, Swarland-dean, Swarland East-house, Swarland-fence, Swarland-moor, Swarland mill and Overgrass mill, besides the old mansion of the Heselrigs at Swarland hall and the more modern residence formerly called Swarland house and now Swarland park. The population in 1901 was 106.³

The only recorded vestiges of the prehistoric inhabitants of the place were found in the early part of the nineteenth century by some workmen while 'digging gravel for the walks at Swarland house out of a hill side in a field called Harry's Chair, on the north-west side of Swarland old hall. They came to a kind of kist vaen in which was the remains of a human body of large size, the teeth and cheek bones were pretty perfect.' The kist also contained an urn of coarse pottery, apparently filled with an oily fat or unctuous substance. There was also found near it another similar kist, but without any remains.⁴

Swarland, a member of the barony of Mitford, was in the early part of the thirteenth century held in part of the lords of the fee by socage tenants, some of whom took their name from the place; one was called the cook. It is stated in Testa de Nevill that 'Willelmus filius coci' held half a curacate of land of Roger Bertram and paid 6d. yearly.¹ His name appears as an attesting witness to several of the Brinkburn charters,² and Christiana, daughter of William le Keu, in or before 1294, recovered her seisin against Hugh de Carliol and others.³

The name of Richard de Swarland appears as a witness to a grant made to the prior and convent of Brinkburn by Adam Maufetur in 1253,⁴ to a confirmation granted to the same house about 1266,⁵ and to several others of the Brinkburn charters.⁶ He was defendant in an action in 1272 brought by Robert de Nevill and Ida his wife for a third part of one messuage and four bovates of land in Swarland which they claimed as of her dower from her former husband, Roger Bertram IV.⁷ About the same time Richard de Swarland, called the forestar, confirmed by a charter attested by Guichard de Charron, the sheriff of Northumberland,⁸ certain wastes, etc., at Lythacksyde granted by his son William to Thomas de Carliolo.⁹

In 1269 Agnes, daughter of Adam de Swarland, claimed two messuages and four bovates of land in Swarland, alleging that she had been unjustly

disseised by Roger Bertram of Mitford of the said lands, which had belonged to her ancestors; she was non-suited.¹

An entry in the Patent Rolls of 1254 seems to indicate that Agnes Bertram, daughter of Roger Bertram III., had been married or contracted in marriage to a son of Peter de Montford before her marriage with Thomas fitz William, and that, as a marriage portion, he was to have from her father the mill and ten librates of land in Swarland.²

The only son of Roger Bertram III. died in his father's lifetime, leaving a widow, Ida, who remarried Robert de Nevill, and an only child, Agnes Bertram, who succeeded to Mitford castle. Roger Bertram having incurred a heavy debt in the Barons' war largely dismembered his estate. About the year 1266 he granted Swarland to Agnes, sometimes called Agnes Cousdene, one of the children of his daughter Agnes by her husband Thomas fitz William, variously described as of Sprotborough, Emley or Woodhall. The charter³ was attested by John de Halton, then sheriff of Northumberland.⁴

As Agnes fitz William sold the vill¹ within four years² to Thomas, son of Thomas de Carlolo, a wealthy burgess of Newcastle, a sale confirmed by her grandfather,³ it is possible that she had no beneficial ownership and that her name was lent and used to strengthen the title. A few years afterwards, Roger Bertram, in a charter attested by Guichard de Charron, sheriff of Northumberland,⁴ granted Thomas Carlolo common of pasture and other privileges in Felton-shire.⁵

The family of the new proprietor of Swarland produced many eminent citizens of Newcastle. Henry de Karle was one of the bailiffs as early as 1251, and mayor in 1254,¹ Thomas de Karle, the purchaser, was bailiff in 1253, 1254, and apparently mayor from 1264 to 1279,² and Thomas de Karle, junior, was a bailiff in 1271, 1272, 1273 and 1277.³ Thomas de Carliolo, senior, had two sons and perhaps other children. Hugh de Carliolo, the eldest son, was mayor of Newcastle in 1291, 1292, 1293, 1295 and 1296.⁴ He was also burgess in the parliament summoned for November 27th, 1295.⁵ Nicholas de Karliolo represented the borough in 1302 and 1311.⁶

In 1275 Thomas de Karl was called upon to defend an action brought by Robert de Neville and Ida his wife, who claimed against him a third part of 24 acres of land in Felton and the third part of the water corn-mill of Swarland.⁷ The plaintiffs obtained a verdict against Agnes, daughter of Thomas, who had been called to give warranty.⁸ He had also to defend an action brought in 1278 by Margery, widow of William Hirning, for her dower in a third part of two messuages, 60 acres of land and 6 acres of meadow in Swerlaund,⁹ and again, in 1284, to defend an action brought by Henry Hirning to recover a toft and 40 acres of land in Swareland.¹⁰

Thomas de Carliolo, by a charter attested by Hugh Gubion, sheriff of Northumberland,¹¹ for an annuity of £50 a year, gave his manor of Swarland, with the villis, tenements and lands of Overgrass, Gamelthorpfeld, Glantlees, Duddo and Twizell, to his eldest son, Hugh de Carliolo.¹² He was dead

Hugh de Carliol also owned property in Newcastle, for by an undated charter he had a release from his father Thomas of certain lands by the Lorteburn, lying between the land of Emma Torald and that formerly belonging to William Norrays, and subsequently, with the consent of his wife Joan and his son Thomas, he gave with his daughter Alice in marriage to James the apothecary a messuage under the castle moat formerly belonging to William de Ponte. The grant was attested by Henry Scott, chief bailiff of Newcastle,³ Nicholas Carliol, Peter Graper and others.⁴

Thomas de Karliolo, son of Hugh, demised lands in Pilgrim Street in 1303,⁵ and in 1309 he granted to William de Bulmer of Newcastle at the rent of 100s. of silver the land opposite the Sandhill, formerly held by Philip, son of Sampson.⁶ In the same year he was defendant in an application made by John de Corbrig, who sought to replevy his lands in Having no sons, Thomas de Carliolo settled his lands on his five daughters—Cecily, wife of Peter Graper; Constance, wife of Thomas Grethened; Elizabeth, wife of Robert de Tughale; Joanna, wife of John de Wakefield; and Alice, wife of Nicholas de Acton.¹ He was still living in 1336.

Peter Graper, who, presumably in right of his wife, succeeded to Swarland, was a member of a wealthy family of Newcastle merchants. He was grandson of Ormo Graper or Grapier, of whom John de Swinburn held lands in Colwell. These lands were the subject of litigation in 1324 between his grandson and Adam de Swinburn.²

Peter le Graper was one of the representatives of Newcastle in the parliaments of 1295, 1298, 1305 and 1306,³ he was one of the men appointed, January 12th, 1296/7, to advise with the earl of Surrey touching the site and state of Berwick-on-Tweed.⁴ He was probably father to the new owner of Swarland.

Beside his son Peter, Peter le Graper had another son, Thomas, who in August, 1344, granted to John de Raveneserche, 'schether,' burgess of Newcastle, the land there called 'la Payntid Hall,' with garden, at 2s. yearly rent.⁵ Peter, son of Peter Graper of Newcastle, in 1346 acquired from Adam Gayderer of Newcastle, pewterer, two butts of arable land in the castle field between the land formerly Adam Graper's and the land of the said Peter.⁶ Peter Graper represented Newcastle in the parliament of 1348, he being mayor of the town in that year,⁷ and in September,

Graper as a settlement on his marriage with Mary, daughter of Richard de Stanhope, burgess of Newcastle.¹ In the same year, on the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula (August 1st), she also secured to her son Thomas a rent of £30 of silver from all her lands and tenements in Newcastle.² In the same month she gave lands in Newcastle on a lease for ten years to Mary Fawside.³ Cecily Graper apparently died soon after, for in February, 1363, her son Thomas, being in possession of the lands and tenements in Newcastle, granted a messuage on the Sandhill to his brother Peter and his wife Isolda.⁴ At Swarland on May 20th, 1369, he entered into indenture with John de Wharthon, lord of Framlington, and on June 16th of the same year, under the description of 'Thomas Graper, son and heir of Cecily,' daughter and heiress of Thomas de Cardoyll, formerly burgess of Newcastle, he grants land in Newcastle on lease to Lawrence de Acton.⁵

By a charter made at Swarland on All Saints' day, 1376, Thomas Graper settled the vill and manor of Swarland on his two daughters, Agnes and Isabel,⁶ and he appears to have died soon after. burgess of Newcastle, gave a tenement in the Cokerawe to Richard Milner, mercer, and Agnes his wife.¹ Peter Graper, a younger brother of Thomas, was still living in the latter part of the fourteenth century.²

John Heselrig, the husband of the heiress of Swarland, died before Michaelmas, 1391, when Agnes in her widowhood dealt with certain lands in Newcastle, the deed being attested by William de Bishopdale, then mayor,³ whom she married shortly afterwards.⁴

Agnes Bishopdale was dead before January 12th, 1408/9, when her son was in possession of Swarland.⁵ On the Wednesday after December 8th, 1429, Thomas Heselrigg 'of Swarland' and Agnes his wife took a conveyance from certain feoffors of '40s. rent from four tenements lying together on the Sandhill, Newcastle.'⁶ On March 1st, 1444/5, Thomas Heselrigg, esquire, gave 21 butts of land in the townfields of Newcastle to John Richardson, merchant, the grant being confirmed three days later by John Heselrigg, his son and heir.⁷ On the 4th of June following, the latter acquired two tenements in Newcastle by grant of William Carliol, girdler, and Agnes his wife.⁸

Until the evidence is more fully examined it cannot be certainly determined whether the Heselriggs of Swarland took their name from the vill so styled in the parish of Chatton, or from the less known Hazelrig near Gosforth, but it is not impossible that they derived their origin from the former and bestowed their name on the latter place. After their settlement at Swarland they seem to have lived a quiet unobtrusive life, allying themselves in marriage with the neighbouring gentry, but taking little part in public affairs.

SWARLAND MUSTER ROLL, 1538.¹

Hudson, George Brewell, Dave Moryson, John Swayne, John Gray, Thomas Todderaye, Willme Todderay, Willme Cloyt, Willme Rycetson, John Brown, Georg Browne, Ryc. Browne, Thomas Brone, Robt. Heppell, not able.

By a fine levied in the octave of Michaelmas, 1561, Lancelot Heslerigg of Swarland conveyed the manor of Swarland, with lands there, the vill of Firth and premises at Glantliese to Robert Horsley and John Horsley, who immediately regranted them to Lancelot to hold for the term of his life with remainders to Agnes his wife, to the heirs of Lancelot and Agnes, and on failure of such issue with remainder to the right heirs of Lancelot. Lancelot Heslerigge died on May 4th, 1565, leaving Agnes his widow and a son Robert, who was four years old and upwards on June 1st, 1567. The manors and tenements of Swarland, Glantliese and Firth were held of Thomas, earl of Northumberland, as of his manor of Mitford in socage, by suit of court and a yearly rent. The manor and tenement of Swarland were of the clear yearly value of £5 6s. 8d., that of Glantliese being £4 13s. 4d., and of Firth £1 6s. 8d. Thomas Lisle of Warkworth had the manor and tenement of Firth in farm for certain years.²

The portion of the Feodary's book of 1568, relating to Swarland, is imperfect, and the only proprietor whose name is entered is John Burrell.³

At the Muster taken on the Mootlaw on March 26th, 1580, three horsemen presented themselves from Swarland.⁴

The material for the construction of a pedigree² of the family during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries is very scanty, but the estate descended lineally from John de Heselrigg, who died about 1390, to Robert Heselrigg, who died in 1716.

I give my messuage and farmhold called Overgrass or Overgrass Steeds, in the parish of Felton, and the water corn-mill there, to my granddaughter, Anne Metcalfe, and her heirs. My said granddaughter, Anne Metcalfe, sole executrix. Proved about 10th May, 1732. Ibid.

Heslrigg Bulman married, March 8th, 1755, Mary Davison (St. John's Register, Newcastle), and their daughter Mary was baptised September 28th, 1755 (ibid.).

² Ewbank Curry was the only surviving son of Matthew Curry of North Blyth, in the parish of Bedlington, whose will, dated March 31st, 1700, gives his land and colliery at East Sligborne to his wife Hannah and his children Frances, Dorothy and Ewbank. Raine, Test. Dunelm.

In 1663 William Heslrigg, esq., was assessed for Swarland and Glantlees at £180, for 'White-rose-beald' at £26, for the Firth at £11, for the Long Row in Framlington at £6, and for the Snukebank at £6.¹

The Heslriggs of Swarland do not appear to have taken any prominent part in the great civil war, but Sir Arthur Heslrigg of Noseley, who represented another branch of the family, distinguished himself as one of the most active generals and statesmen of the Commonwealth. His descendant, on the failure of the main line, ultimately succeeded to Swarland.

Robert Heselrigg of Swarland, by his will dated August 17th, 1714, and by a codicil added two years later, after making sundry legacies, gave the farms of Overgrass, Overgrass Steads, etc., to his nearest agnate, Robert Heselrigg of South Shields, a childless man, giving Swarland, the Glantlees, the Firth, etc., to his namesake, Sir Robert Heselrigg of Nosely, bart. Sir Robert died about 1721, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Arthur Heselrigg, who in 1735 by lease and release dated 26th and 27th September, in consideration of the sum of £10,180, conveyed Swarland, etc., to Richard Grieve of Alnwick.¹

Richard Grieve had two sons who survived him, viz., Davidson Richard Grieve, who succeeded to Swarland, and George Grieve, who succeeded to St. Thomas's lands, Alnwick. The latter had a somewhat eventful career. Born in 1748 and bound apprentice to Peter Thelluson of London, merchant, when he attained his majority he brought a suit against the corporation of Alnwick, who had declined to admit him to his freelege. He was a member of the Bill of Rights Club. He sold his lands at Alnwick in 1779 and emigrated in 1780 to America, where he became acquainted with Washington, returning to Europe before 1783, when he took up his abode in Paris. In 1785 he published a translation of the Memoirs of Baron Tott. He took a prominent part in the French Revolution, and in 1793 caused Madame du Barry to be arrested no less than three times, but was himself arrested after the fall of Robespierre. He was residing at Bordeaux in 1793, but went back to America, where he published in 1796 a translation of Chastellux's Travels. Again returning to Europe he died at Brussels, February 22nd, 1809. His MSS. are preserved in the national archives at Paris.¹

Davidson Richard Grieve died without issue in 1793 and on May 13th, 1795, Swarland was conveyed by his trustees to Alexander Davison, at that time of Harpur Street, in the parish of St. George the martyr, Middlesex, but who came originally from the parish of Kirknewton. Davison had amassed a considerable fortune as a naval contractor, having stores at Montreal as well as in England.² Lord Nelson was his very good friend, and he commemorated this fact by the erection of a dwarf obelisk by the side of the great North Road, with the following inscription cut on its east face: 'England expects every man to do his duty. | Victory, 21 October, 1805. | Not to commemorate the public virtues | and heroic achievements of | Nelson which is the duty of England, | but to the memory of private friendship, | this erection is dedicated | by Alexander Davison.'³

EVIDENCES TO DAVISON PEDIGREL.

1743/4, 10th January. Will of Alexander Davison of Lanton. I give the sum of £200, now in the hands of William Carr, esq., of Etal, and secured to me by two several bonds, dated June 25th, 1735, and November 21st, 1740, respectively, to my son Ralph Davison. I give the sum of £50, now in the hands of Mr. George Carr of Bowden and secured by the bond of his late father, William Carr of E-het, esq.; also the sum of £80 due to me from John Strother Ker, esq., being interest for two years on the principal sum of £800 which was due to me at Martima-last, to my said son Ralph Davison. I give my houses in Pallat Street, Bewick-upon-Tweed, being mortgaged to me by the late Samuel Stanton, together with the principal sum of £120 secured on the said houses and the proceeds of the same, to my son James Davison and my friend Mr. John Hall, their executors, etc. Residue to my two sons. My grandson Alexander Davison, eldest son of my son Ralph Davison. My eldest son James Davison and my son Ralph Davison to see my wife Margaret Davison provided with every necessary she wants, and the £40 a year the said Margaret has by a former deed; part of the said £40 a year to be received to my granddaughter Mary Davison, natural daughter of my son George Davison of Coupland. My two sons James and Ralph to take care of the education of my said granddaughter Mary Davison. My son Ralph executor. Proved 25th February, 1743 4.

1761, 7th October. Original will of Alexander Davison of Lanton. I have already given bonds, payable after my death, to my sons Alexander and George for £1,800 apiece, for their advancement in the world. I give to the said Alexander £200 and to the said George £600 over and above; to my daughter Catherine, wife of Captain Roddam Home, £1,000; to each of her children, William, Charlotte, George Johnstone, Roddam John, and John, £50 apiece; to my grandson and godson Alexander Home, another child of the said Catherine, £100. My real estate to my eldest son John Davison, he to be kind to his Brothers and sisters and to his nephews and nieces. Lanton deeds.

1824, 28th May. Will of John Davison of Lanton. To my nephew Hugh Percy Davison, £2,000; to my nieces Elizabeth Davison and Dorothy Davison, £2,000 apiece; to my nephew John Home Home, £1,000; to my worthy friend the Rev. Gavin Wallace of Nenthorn and the Rev. Robert Home of Polworth, £100 apiece. All my estates to my nephew William Davison, he executor. Proved 6th April, 1827. Durham Probate Registry.

After the death of Sir William Davison, Swarland was offered for sale, and in 1874 was purchased by Mr. J. G. Riddell of Felton Park, to whose son, Mr. Cuthbert Riddell, this estate now belongs.

The hamlet of Swarland consists of half a dozen houses and cottages, and the seventeenth-century mansion house of the Heselriggs.¹ The door and window openings of that house have curious architraves and twisted pillars, and the roof is covered with grey sandstone flags quarried on Rim-side moor. A little distance from the old hall is a large and excellent walled garden with a garden house. Near the north-west corner of a small field, situate on the north and west sides of a plantation adjoining the old hall and about 200 yards west of that building,² there used to be a tombstone with an inscription cut in Roman characters. On the enclosure of Felton common in 1754, 337 acres were awarded to Richard Grieve, in lieu of his right of common of pasture. On a portion of the land so allotted, his son and successor, Davidson Richard Grieve, in 1765, erected a mansion, formerly known as Swarland house, and now called Swarland park. After Mr. Riddell purchased the estate he sold off this house with 484 acres of land adjoining. After passing through various hands it was purchased in 1902 by Mr. James E. Woods of Newcastle, who has recently, by purchase from Mr. Cathbert Riddell, added 150 acres to his estate, and who now resides there.

OVERGRASS.

The homestead of Overgrass is about three-quarters of a mile north-west of Swarland park and near the confines of the township, but the old vill or hamlet of Overgrass occupied a sequestered site in the neighbouring dene on the left bank of the Swarland burn.

Overisgar' was a member of the barony of Mitford¹ and 40 acres of land there were held in socage at the beginning of the thirteenth century by David le Waylays, who paid 10s. to the lord of the fee.² When Roger Bertram III. of Mitford dismembered his estates, he gave a carucate of land in Overgar to Robert de Gameltorpe—a knight whose name appears in several of the Brinkburn charters—under the annual payment of 1d. to Roger and his heirs.³

At the Northumberland assizes of 1256 an action was brought by the prior of Brinkburn against Roger Bertram III. of Mitford and Peter de Montefort respecting common of pasture in Ovegares, and at the same assizes Peter de Montefort was plaintiff in an action against Hugh Page and Thomas the provost for a trespass on his mill and mill-dam at Oversgare and for an assault on his men.⁴ The dispute between Roger Bertram and the prior of Brinkburn was ended by a cirograph agreement dated on Tuesday after May 6th, 1256, and witnessed by William Heron, the sheriff of Northumberland, Wydo de Araynis, Nicholas de Aketon and others. Robert de Gamelthorpe was a party to the deed.⁵

About this time the vill of Overgaris was sold by Roger Bertram to William, son of Ralph de Herle,¹ against whom, in 1272-1273, Ida, widow of Roger Bertram IV., and her second husband, Robert de Nevill, brought an action to recover as her dower the third part of the manor of Eueres-gares.² They brought a similar action against Robert de Hilton, who had acquired Robert de Gamelthorp's lands³ for a third part of the forests of Rimmessyde and Walmereches in Felton.⁴

In 1279 the vill of Oversgares was held by John, son of John de Herle, then under age.⁵ The place was assessed together with Glantlees for the subsidy of 1296.

Willelmus de Herll, 6s. 8d. Summa patet.

Sir William de Herle died March 8th, 1346/7,⁶ seised of lands in Overgares. His son, Sir Robert de Herle, dying without issue, July 5th, 1355, was succeeded by his sister Margaret, wife of Sir Ralph de Hastings, knight, of Allerston, Yorkshire.⁷

OVERGRASS TOWER.

The tower of Overgrass is not mentioned in the list of fortalices of 1415, and nothing is known of the history of the place during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. It stands low, lying about twenty yards to the south-west of the Swarland burn, and is almost hidden from view by the banks of the stream, which are steep and clothed with trees. There are indications by the side of the stream of the abutment of a bridge.

Overgrass tower is comparatively small, oblong in shape, with a slight projection or buttress to carry the staircase. It is built of good masonry in courses similar in style to those of Chipchase castle, with extra large stones to the external angles and door jambs as at Coeklaw tower and the vicar's pele at Corbridge. It was erected probably during the fourteenth century.

Only the vaulted basement now remains; it measures in the interior 23 feet 6 inches by 15 feet 10 inches, enclosed by walls about 6 feet in thickness. The entrance door is at the east end of the south side, and was secured by a falling bar. The lower steps of a circular newel staircase leading to the upper floors still exist on the right of the entrance. At the foot of the staircase a door, having a flat-pointed arched head, opens off the lobby and gives access to the basement, which has a vaulted roof and is lighted by two small square openings, one at the east and one at the west end. There are two small recesses or aumbries on the interior, and in the thickness of the west wall a shaft probably belonging to a garde robe.

Before the end of the sixteenth century Overgrass was acquired, in whole or in part, by the Forsters of Adderston. By his will, dated April 4th, 1589, Thomas Forster of Adderston gave his estate at that place and his lands at Newton-on-the-Moor, Osgars and other places to his grandson,

Matthew Forster, natural son of his son Thomas Forster, deceased.¹ At a warden court held at Berwick, February 2nd, 1596/7, Ralph Forster² of Owsgrasse filed a bill against Archy Trumble and Gib. Lorreyn for six oxen, price £12; two kine, price £3; and 'insight' gear of the value of five marks.³

REIINS OF OVERGRASS TOWER: INTERIOR.

October 17th, 1616. Will of Rauffie Forster of Overgrasse, gent. To my brother-in-law William Welton of Weelton, gent., and my son William Forster my hamlet called Greues in the parish of Felton, so that the profits may be divided amongst my children Thomas, William, Mary, Matthew and Cuthbert Forster for the payment of a legacy bequeathed to them by John Forster of Newham, deceased. The said messuage called the Greues, after the expiration of the said demise, the Overgrasse, Shealdecks and Haggehouse to be my wife's during life, remainder to my son Rauffie Forster. My cousin Mr. Matthew Forster of Edderston and Cuthbert Collingwood of Shipley, etc., to be supervisors. My son Cuthbert executor. Proved November 19th, 1616. Inventory exhibited May 22nd, 1616.⁴

William Forster, son of Ralph Forster of Overgrass, gent., was apprenticed, May 1st, 1619, to Robert Selby of Newcastle, merchant adventurer,¹ and on December 14th, 1626, the tuition of Cuthbert Forster of Oversgasse was granted to his brother William Forster.²

In 1663 Oversgrass and the Greene were held by Ralph Forster and Matthew Forster, each of whom was assessed at £20.³ No notice is taken in the book of rates of any lands in Overgrass held by the Greys of Howick, but, by his will dated March 22nd, 1666, Edward Grey of Howick gave his lands in Overgrasse to his youngest brother Martin Grey and his heirs.⁴

Overgrass, Overgrass stead and the mill, which probably represented the estate belonging to the Forsters, were acquired before 1714 by Robert Heselrigg of Swarland, and by him were given to his cousin Robert Heselrigg of Sleekburn. The latter gave these lands to his widow, who, by will dated February 10th, 1731/2,⁵ gave them to her granddaughter, Dorothy Metcalf, afterwards wife of Robert Chambers of Newcastle. He voted in respect of lands in Overgrass⁶ at the elections of knights of the shire in 1734 and 1748.⁷ Mrs. Chambers, in 1771, accompanied her distinguished son, Sir Robert Chambers, to Bengal and died there in 1782.⁸ She apparently sold

The lands given to Martin Grey in 1666 descended to his fourth son, who bore his father's name and was postmaster at Alnwick.¹ His only son, Edward Grey of Alnwick, voted at the election of knights of the shire in 1774 for lands in Overgrass, and by his will dated June 27th, 1788, gave that estate to his cousin, John Thomas Seton, for his life and then to Charles Grey the younger of Morwick. By lease and release, dated May 14th and 15th, 1801, John Thomas Seton, described as late of Calcutta, but then residing in Marylebone, the tenant for life, and Charles Grey of Morwick as executor of Edward Grey and as guardian of his infant son Charles Grey the younger, agreed to sell Overgrass to Alexander Davison of Swarland for the sum of £5,000. The agreement was carried into execution by Charles Grey the younger on July 9th, 1807, after he attained his majority.² Overgrass remained part of the Swarland estates until 1874, when it was purchased by Mr. W. J. Robinson of Newmoor-house.

GREENS AND GLANTLEES TOWNSHIP.

The area of the combined township of Greens and Glantlees is 993 acres. It rises to a height of 859 feet above sea-level at the Gowkstone on the confines of Alnwick Moor. The census returns have ranged from seventy-nine in 1841 to fifteen in 1891; in 1901 there was a population of thirty-six.³

Glantlees was a member of the barony of Mitford,⁴ and amongst the estates and places given by Roger Bertram of Mitford to the prior and canons of Brinkburn were a toft and croft containing an acre of land in the vill of Glanteley; the charter was attested by Robert de Gamelesthorp and others.⁵ By another charter the same Roger gave them Evenwood and common of fuel in his turbarry of Glanteley.⁶ These grants were confirmed by King John, February 19th, 1200/1⁷ and by Henry III. on May 20th, 1259.⁸

On the dismemberment of the barony of Mitford in the middle of the thirteenth century, Glantlees was sold by Roger Bertram III. of Mitford to Sir Peter de Montfort.¹ He immediately resold it to William de Alstentoft, whose son held it in 1275.² William Hastentot was defendant in an action brought in Hilary term, 1272/3, by Robert de Nevill and Ida his wife for a third part of two bovates of land in Glanteley,³ as parcel of the dower of Ida from her former husband, Roger Bertram IV.

The name of the purchaser is given in yet another form in the Northumberland Assize Rolls of 1270, where Roger Bertram is recorded to have sold the vill of Glanteley to William de Hastingtōf.⁴ Overgrass at this period, as has been already stated, belonged to John de Herle,⁵ who in 1291-1292 brought an action against Master Adam, the dyer, of Newcastle, concerning tenements in Glanteley.⁶ As Glantlees is associated with Overgrass for the subsidy roll of 1296, it is a somewhat problematical conjecture that the William, son of William, who heads the list was the unnamed son of William de Hastingtōt or Alstentoft.

year 1334 Thomas Carliol settled Glantlees on his daughter Constance, widow of Robert de Sokpeth, with remainder to Robert de Tuggal and Elizabeth his wife with further remainders.¹

GLANTLEY SUBSIDY ROLL, 1336.

Johannes de Karliolo, 3s. Alexander de Hyndmeres, 2s. Summa, 5s.

The interests given under the settlement of 1334 to Robert and Constance de Sokpeth and to Robert and Elizabeth de Tuggal must have soon come to an end, for Glantlees seems to have reverted to Peter Graper, either in himself or in his issue, and with Swarland passed to the Heselriggs. In 1368 Thomas Heselrigg, described as of Denington (probably Dinnington near Newcastle), took a release of a rent charge or annuity charged on lands in Cleveland and in Glantless.² The history of the place for the next three hundred years is similar to that of Swarland.

Three messuages and arable and meadow land with common of pasture in Greenes and Rymesyde respectively, in the occupations of Henry Alder, John Longe, and William Grange, formerly belonging to the prior and convent of Brinkburn, were granted, March 23rd, 1552/3, for a competent sum of money to John Wright and Thomas Holmes, both of London, gentlemen, to hold of the manor of East Greenwich by fealty only in free socage and not in chief.³

In 1611 Gilbert Law brought an action in the Court of Exchequer against Robert Heselrigge, John, Henry and Rowland Davison respecting the boundaries of Edlingham moor and Glantlees common. The following are abstracts of some of the depositions :

³ Pat. Rolls, 7 Edw. VI. pt. 4.

Hartburn, 21st January, 1611/2. Thomas Lyslee of Shillbottle, aged 60 years, deposed: That he does not know the number of acres in Glantlye moor but supposes it to be about 4 miles in circuit. The bounds are—beginning at a green well, west to the stone fold, thence to the Reale hill, thence to the chapel stone, thence to the Read-hughe,¹ thence to a stone carne lying north east, then down an allerie dean directly north to Edlingham mill dam, thence westward up the burn to Whitlye Clughe, thence to Grubbstrother, thence southward to Broweden hill, thence to the Lambecragg.² These bounds divide the earl of Northumberland's land on the east and from Edlingham moor on the east and west. That the tenants of Glantlye and Snewkebanke have ever during the time that he has lived there had common of pasture on the whole of Glantlye common until within the last six years when there has been some question made by Mr. John Swynborne. Also that the said tenants have ever had common of turbary on Glantlye common and been used to staff herd their cattle over the whole thereof. That he never knew the said tenants to be troubled for feeding their cattle on Glantlye moor until within the last six years as aforesaid; and never knew the said tenants to make any claim to common for their cattle on Edlingham moor. That the said John Davison and Henry Davison dwell at Snewke-banke and hold and occupy certain lands in Glantlie. That he knows Rowland Davison to be son to the said John Davison.

On the same day and at the same place. Thomas Pulmoore of the Oversheele-dikes, aged 80 years deposed: that Glantlye common or moor may be about two miles in length from east and west and about a mile and a half north and south; it lies directly north and north-west from Glantlie. That he has known the tenants of Glantlie and Snewke-banke for a space of 20 years or more to depasture and sometimes staff herd their cattle and also to take and cut turves on the whole of Glantlye moor without molestation from any.

On the same day and at the same place. Robert Richeson of Overgrasse, aged 50 years, deposed.

On the same day and at the same place. William Awther of Ould Felton, aged 50 years, deposed: that Glantlye moor is, to the best of his knowledge, about five miles in circuit, and lies north and north-west from Glantlye town. Its bounds are, beginning at the green letch at Glantlye loaning head, to the green well, thence to Glantlye stone fold, to Realye hill, then to the chapel stone, and over the head of the Rea-clughe to the Read-hughe, then to a great stone carne and the allerie burne to Edlingham burn, then to the foot of Whitlye clughe and so to the head of Whitlye cleugh to Grubstrother, then to Broweden hill and the Lamb crag. It is severed from the earl of Northumberland's lands on the east, further he cannot say.

On the same day and at the same place. Thomas James of Swarland, aged 60, deposed.⁴

In 1663 William Heselrigg of Swarland was assessed for lands at Glantlees together with Swarland, and Ralph Forster and Matthew Forster in moieties for lands at 'Oversgrass and the Greene.'⁴ On the door-head of the old farmhouse at the Greenses, which was reconstructed in 1889, was the inscription ^{F.}M.M. 1668, evidently the initials of Matthew Forster and his wife.

Matthew Forster's daughter Elizabeth married Martin Grey, who on April 14th, 1698, conveyed to Robert Heselrigg.⁵

⁵ Ralph Forster of Overgrasse, gent., December 27th, 1653, conveyed the Greenses to Matthew Forster of Bamburgh Friars, and the said Matthew Forster, February 24th, 1670, settled the same estate upon his only child Elizabeth and her husband Martin Grey. Martin and Elizabeth Grey, with their eldest son Philip Grey, sold the Greens for the sum of £980 to Robert Heselrigg. Mr. S. F. Widdrington's deeds.

Under the provisions of the will of Robert Heselrigg of Swarland, Glantlees passed to Sir Robert Heselrigg of Noseley, bart., and was sold by his son Sir Arthur Heselrigg, September 27th, 1735, to Joseph Cook of Newton-on-the-Moor,¹ who on August 31st, 1736, purchased the Greenes from Dorothy, wife of Richard Metcalf, and others the devisees of Robert Heselrigg, for £1,850.² Both places now belong to Joseph Cook's descendant and representative, Mr. S. F. Widdrington.

FRAMLINGTON TOWNSHIP.

The township of Framlington, or, as it is very generally called, Long Framlington, contains 5,101 acres, and is co-extensive with an ancient parochial chapelry in the parish of Felton. The district ranges from an elevation of 200 feet above sea-level at one point on the Swarland-burn to 1,011 feet at Shirlaw Pike, in the north-western part of Framlington moor. It is watered by the Swarland-burn, the Gate-burn, the Millstone-burn, the Fence-burn and other streamlets, and was formerly to a large extent uncultivated and open moorland; there are still over eleven hundred acres of rough pasture and moor. The eastern boundary of the township is in a large measure defined by the Swarland-burn, and on the south it is cut off from the Coquet in a curious fashion by arbitrary lines. In 1901 there was a population of 469,³ with 106 inhabited houses, situated in the village of Long Framlington and the homesteads or hamlets of Low or Little Framlington, Canada, Embleton-steads, Low-hall, Knogley, Mount Pleasant, Newmoor-house, Long Raw, Shaw, Small-dean, Snook-bank, etc.

The village of Long Framlington contains the chapel, now a parish church, a parsonage, schools,⁴ a Presbyterian chapel⁵ and manse, Embleton hall, and about a hundred houses and cottages. At the fairs formerly held here on the second Tuesday in July and on October 25th, large numbers of lambs, sheep and black cattle used to change hands.

A small coal mine is worked at Framlington colliery for landsale purposes.

On the farm called Canada there is a camp, of which Sir David Smith, about eighty years ago, wrote :

In the campfield S.W. of the house is one of those camps, or strongholds, which from the remains appears to have been rather oval with the ends somewhat flattened; the vallum has been of stone, with a ditch before it; the greatest length from N. to S. within the walls about 60 paces, and E. to W. about 40. On the banks of the rivulet which runs through this farm, particularly near the farmhouse and north of it, slag or scoriae is found, such as is produced by smelting iron-ore. As the iron is said to be very imperfectly extracted, it is supposed to have been done at a remote period when the art of fluxing metals was little known, and some authors have therefore conjectured it may have been a work of the Romans, which they imagine to be strengthened by the place being nearly adjacent to the Herman Street, an ancient military way of that people, which is very perfect in many parts of the parish. The rivulet before mentioned is one of the streams which forms the Manor burn, or New Moor burn, in which great quantity of ironstone is found to this day.

In the hold field, belonging to this farm, close upon the north side of the road from Framlington to Newton-on-the-Moor and to Shield-dykes, there was another camp or stronghold in the memory of man, but now so much ploughed down as to be traced with the utmost difficulty. It stood exactly opposite to the lane which comes down to the road from New Moor house. An old farmer, who recollects the demolition of the camps, says that the site of it was covered nearly with large flat stones or flags, some of which are yet to be seen, and a great number of hand mill-stones have been ploughed up, of somewhat semi-globular shape with a conical hole through the centre.¹

Excepting in these and some other unexplored camps on Rimside Moor, and cairns and some other sepulchral monuments, few remains have been found of the prehistoric inhabitants of the district. The eastern branch of Watling Street passed through the village of Long Framlington.² On the Hall-hill there is what is stated to be the site of a Roman camp; 'its situation and its commanding prospect, including a view of the sea in the distance, render this probable, though there is little left to confirm the supposition.' 'The farmhouse stands near what is supposed to be the original trustees were George Sanderson of Edlingham, Robert Sanderson of Snook-bank, Andrew Mather of Weldon and Robert Jobson of Eshot-beugh. The church had previously worshipped in a house at Swarland under the ministry of the Rev. William Archbold, chaplain of the Heselrigg family. Archbold took an annuity under the will of the last Robert Heselrigg of Swarland, and voted for the same at the elections of knights of the shire in 1722 and 1748. The first Presbyterian minister at Framlington was the Rev. Thomas Lake, or Laick, who was buried [October] 3rd, 1730 (Framlington Register). Among his successors were the Rev. Anthony Hedley, who, dying at the age of 64, was buried June 6th, 1817 (ibid.); the Rev. Andrew Richardson, who died about 1844; and the Rev. W. R. Barrie, who (in 1889) communicated some of these particulars.

Near the farmhouse at Canada there are, as stated above, deposits of slag from an iron furnace.²

In the second part of the twelfth century the vill of Framlington was held, in whole or in part, of the barony of Mitford by William de Framlington, son of Ralph de Hechelaw or Heithlau, who gave the manor of Heithlau or Heathlaw to the abbot and convent of Newminster;³ and to the canons of Brinkburn certain lands, which have not been identified, called Langliventon, between Titlesdene and Welpesticroke, with common of pasture, etc., between Merinclooghe and Heleyburne. The grant to Brinkburn, which was witnessed by William Bertram I. of Mitford and his son Roger, cannot be much later than 1157.⁴ It was subsequently confirmed by William Bertram II.⁵ and in 1201 by King John.⁶

By an undated charter, witnessed by William Bertram, Richard Bertram, Bernard de Arenis (of Whittonstall) and others, clergy and laymen, William de Framlington gave to God, the Blessed Mary, and St. John Baptist, in whose honour divine service was celebrated in the chapel of Framlington, five score acres of land in the field of Framlington;⁷ and by another charter, witnessed by Stephen, parson of Warkworth, and others, he gave two pieces of land, viz., Akehalgh and Lynehalgh, to the canons of Brinkburn for the souls of his father and mother, his wife Cecilia and his son Michael, and also for the souls of William Bertram, Roger his son, and William, son of the said Roger.⁸

William de Framlington died before 1196, leaving five daughters co-heiresses, viz., Beatrice, wife of Alan de Eslington; Margaret, wife successively of Jordan de Framlington, William Pigace and William de la Tur; Agnes, wife of William, son of Brian; Matilda (or Amabilia), wife of Adam Hirning, and Emma who was unmarried in 1197. There was a final concord about lands in Framlington made in the king's court at Westminster, October 29th, 1196, between Jordan (de Framlington) and Margaret his wife, plaintiffs, and Alan de Eslington and Beatrice his wife.¹ On February 2nd, 1196/7, by a final concord in the king's court at Newcastle the said Jordan and Margaret surrendered to William, son of Brien, and Agnes his wife a fifth part of the vill of Framinton, for which William and Agnes granted to Jordan and Margaret half a carucate of land of their portion of Framinton for 12d., to be paid yearly at Michaelmas for the life of Margaret, with remainder after her death to William and Agnes and their heirs.² By two other concords of the same date Jordan and Margaret his wife surrendered to Adam and Amabilia his wife and their heirs one-fifth part, and to Emma, daughter of William de Framinton, and her heirs another fifth part of the vill of Framinton; the said Adam and Amabilia and the said Emma granted to Jordan and Margaret, for the life of Margaret, half a carucate of land of their respective portions for a yearly rent of half a pound of pepper, at Michaelmas, for each half-carucate.³

When King John made his expedition into Northumberland in 1200 the prior and convent of Brinkburn availed themselves of the opportunity and procured a royal confirmation of the foundation of their house and of the various grants made to them up to that time. It is dated at Hexham, February 19th, 1200/1, and particular mention is made in it of the grants by Ralph de Hekhelaw and his son William de Framlington of the whole land of Parva Framelinton, of common of pasture, etc., of one acre by his brother Robert, of one plough-land in Framelinton, given by the said William, and of 5½ acres of the field of Framelinton by William Brian.⁴

When the Testa de Nevill was compiled, Framelinton was held by John de Eslington, William de la Tur and Margery his wife, Adam Hyring and Matilda his wife, Thomas Brian and Isabella, sister of the said Matilda, as half a knight's fee of ancient feoffment.¹ From these, the co-heirs of William de Framlington, the canons of Brinkburn received grants of land in Framlington and also obtained from them charters of confirmation of lands given by their ancestors.

William de Framlington's eldest daughter Beatrice, wife of Alan de Eslington, died first and was succeeded by her son, John de Eslington, who gave the canons certain lands in Little Framlington and also a confirmation.² He was party to an agreement with Alan, the prior of Brinkburn, etc., about some enclosures in Framlington,³ to an agreement made in 1249 about the tithes of the multure of Framlington mill,⁴ and to another agreement with William the prior, made in 1254, respecting a rent from Framlington mill.⁵

Margaret, daughter of William de Framlington, though she married three times, died childless. With her first husband, Jordan de Framlington, by a charter attested by Nicholas de Aketon and others, she gave to the canons certain lands and confirmed her father's grant.⁶ With the assent of her second husband, William Pigace, she gave them four messuages with their pertinents in the vill of Framlington,⁷ a toft in Little Framlington and lands in Great Framlington;⁸ and with the assent of her third husband, William de la Tur, she granted them lands in Framlington.⁹ As a widow for the third time in 1246 she confirmed the grants she had made in the lifetime of her husbands, Jordan, W. Pigace, and W. de Latur.¹⁰ In 1247 she made a further grant of land in Framlington,¹¹ and also gave to the canons her nief Adam, son of Roger, son of Simon de Framlington,¹² who thereupon received his manumission from the prior and canons.¹³ In an undated charter made during one of her widowhoods and under the description of Margaret, daughter of W. de Framlington, she confirmed all the gifts and confirmations made by her grandfather, Ralph de Heghelawe, his brother Robert and her father William, of lands in Framlington and Langleventon.¹⁴

Agnes, daughter of William de Framlington, was married before 1196 to William, son of Brien, sometimes called William Brien, who joined

Thomas, son of William Brien and Agnes his wife, in 1256 nephew and co-heir of Margaret de Framlington (Northumberland Assize Rolls, p. 413); joined his father and mother in grants to Brinkburn (Brinkburn Chart. pp. 67, 68); made an agreement with the prior of Brinkburn in 1264, when he was described as 'clericus' (ibid. p. 14).

Matilda (or Amabilia), daughter of William de Framlington, was also married before 1196, and both she and her husband, Adam Hirning, were living at Whitsuntide, 1256, when having been convened before the prior of Carlisle, as papal delegate, about the tithes of their portion of Framlington, they entered into a bond.⁴ Subsequently, as Matilda de Framlington, relict of Adam Hirnyng, she granted lands in Framlington to the prior and convent of Brinkburn,¹ and as Amabilia, daughter of William de Framlington, she in her widowhood granted other lands.²

Little is known of Emma, youngest daughter of William de Framlington, who was unmarried, and probably a young child, in 1197. She may, however, have been mother of Isabel, wife of Hugh de Berwyk, who in 1255 is described as kinswoman and one of the co-heirs of Margaret, daughter of William de Framlington.³

On the death of Margaret de Framlington about 1256, her fifth part of Framlington was divided amongst her co-heirs.

In a series of final concords, made in the king's court at Newcastle in that year, John de Eslington acknowledges 150 acres of land, 6½ messuages and a quarter of the mill of Framlington to be the right of Thomas, son of Agnes (wife of William Brien), who for this gave him a sparrow hawk.⁴ John de Eslington also acknowledges a moiety of one carucate of land in Framlington to be the right of Matilda, wife of Adam Hering, and Isabella, wife of Hugh de Berewyk.⁵ The same John also acknowledges two parts of two carucates of land in Framlington to be the reasonable share of Thomas Bryen, Matilda, wife of Adam Hering, and Isabella, wife of Hugh de Berewyk, in the inheritance of Margaret, daughter of William (de Framlington). He grants to Thomas Bryen one messuage, 1½ tofts, and 3 oxgangs of land, and to Adam and Matilda, Hugh and Isabella, 40 acres of land; John de Eslington is to retain the residue of the said two carucates.⁶

There were some small suits at the Northumberland assizes in 1256 respecting lands in Framlington. Actions were brought by Thomas Brian against Mildred, son of John, against Adam de Hedgley (Hegelegh),⁷ and against William de la Sale.⁸ John de Eslington brought an action against Adam de Hering and Matilda his wife, and Hugh de Berewyk and Isabella his wife.⁹

In 1231 the following tenants of Framlington were defendants in a suit brought by Alan, prior of Brinkburn, respecting common of pasture in Framlington, before Brian, son of Alan, Hugh de Morewic, Jordan Hayrun, and Robert de Witcestre, the justices appointed by the king for an assize of novel disseisin: namely, William Pigac, John de Eslinton, Uctred de

In the dismemberment of the barony of Mitford by Roger Bertram III., the prior and canons of Brinkburn purchased a carucate of land in 'Querwode,' West Rimside, 'Linchewode,' 'Helyope,' 'Skalkelyerdes Nok,' (Snookbank), etc.²

They also acquired other lands in Framlington either by gift or purchase. About the year 1246, by a charter witnessed by Sir William Heron the sheriff, Roger Bertram III. granted them certain waste lands below the vill of Little Framlington,³ and by another charter he granted them the third part of the wood of Linchewode.⁴ He also quitclaimed the services which Richard de Crawleroke owed for lands in the vill of Framlington.⁵ By two other charters during the shrievalty of Sir John de Plessey (circa 1258), he gave them portions of the wood of Rymside, more particularly set out in the charters.⁶ He also gave them lands in Evenwood.⁷ Among the parcels set out in Henry III.'s charter of confirmation dated May 20th, 1259, are the following :

As much land of the said Roger's waste land under (subtus) the vill of Framelinton as it extends from the exit of the vill and east of the way which leads to the ford of William, descending by the same way toward the south direct to the oak called Bradhak, according to a boundary made there, and thence towards the east direct to the same oak, and again from the same oak towards the east to Svinedowe, and so ascending direct through Svindo towards the north to the hedge of the field of the said canons.

Beatrice de Eslington's purparty of her father's lands remained with her descendants for many generations. As already said, the Eslington fifth was augmented on the death of Margaret de Framlington without issue, and it was further added to either by inheritance or purchase.

In an inquisition held at Newcastle on Friday, January 17th, 1264/5, after the death of John de Esselington, it was found that his heir was John, son of Alan de Esselington, who was 16 years of age on May 3rd, 1264. The extent of the manor of Framlington is as follows :

Fourteen acres of arable land in demesne, price of an acre, 4d.; 22 acres of meadow, price of an acre, 8d.; 10 bondmen who held 10 bond-holdings, each of 24 acres of land and worth yearly half a mark, each of them reaps in autumn the lord's corn for two days in the week, the lord providing their food; the autumn work of any two bondmen is worth yearly 20d.; each of them threshes with the lord for one day, harrowes for one day, carries corn for one day, and carries hay for one day, each of these works is worth 1d. Each pays at Christmas four hens, which are worth 4d., and at Easter 20 eggs, which are worth $\frac{1}{2}$ d. They all ought to carry the lord's victuals from Framlington to Esselington, and this service of each husbandman is worth 6d. There is the moiety of a bond-holding, and it does yearly in farm and works as much as appertains to the moiety of a whole bond-holding. There are seven cottagers who hold seven cottages, viz.: John Homel, who holds one acre, one rood, and pays yearly 2s. and does nine works in autumn, the lord feeding him, worth yearly 5d.; Hugh le Waleys, who holds $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres and pays yearly 2s. and does six works in autumn, the lord feeding him, worth yearly 3d.; Alan the carpenter, who holds one acre, pays yearly 2s. and does ten works in autumn, worth 5d.; the toft of Eda, with croft, pays yearly 12d. and does ten autumn works, worth 5d.; the toft of William, son of the chaplain, with croft, pays yearly 2s. only; William de Herton holds two acres, paying yearly 2s. 6d., and does ten works, the lord feeding him, worth yearly 5d.; Roger the dyer (stator), who holds half an acre, pays 12d. and does eight works, the lord feeding him, worth yearly 4d.; Alan Casse, who holds one acre, pays 2s. and does ten works worth 5d.; Geoffrey the turner, who holds two acres, pays 2s. and does ten works, the lord feeding him, worth 5d. Six waste tofts worth yearly 4s. 8d., a mill worth yearly $2\frac{1}{2}$ marks, a garden worth yearly 2s., the increment of four acres of arable land, newly broken up, worth yearly 2s.; the brewhouse which was Sir John's is worth yearly 3s. The manor of Framlington is held of Sir Roger Bertram by service of half a knight's fee and pays to him yearly 40d., and is bound to enclose the park of Mitford yearly, which is worth 2s. One mark is due yearly from the mill to the prior and convent of Brinkeburn, of old feoffment.²

A similar extent was made on the first Sunday after Trinity, 1266, in which it is stated that :

John de Eslington held Framlington of Sir Roger Bertram by service of half a knight's fee. He had in the vill and territory 166 acres of arable land, 14 acres of meadow ; each acre of land in every place, far and near, if cultivated, is worth yearly 4d. ; each acre of meadow is worth 12d. This year only 30 acres are cultivated, of which 20 acres are assessed at 4d. each and 10 at 3d. each, and so there remains 136 acres unused, which pay nothing this year, and each acre of meadow is worth yearly 12d. The garden is worth yearly 3s. Sum of demesne, if cultivated, 72s. 4d. with garden. There are there seven bondmen, of whom each holds two oxgangs of land and pays yearly 9s. 8d., with all works allowed in those 9s. 8d. at Whitsuntide and Michaelmas the sum 67s. 8d. Four and a half cottagers, of whom four hold one cottage with an acre of land and pay 2s. 5d. with his works, viz., at Whitsuntide 12d. and at Martinmas 17d. with his works. Adam de Doxford, and Roger Uthorn and Maud his wife;¹ also a third part of the forests of Rymmessyde and Walmespeches in Felton, held by Robert de Hilton.² By a fine made at Newcastle in February, 1278/9, William (or Richard) de Doxford and Matilda his wife, Roger Daunsel and Alice his wife acknowledge $3\frac{1}{2}$ messuages, 68 acres of land, 6s. 2d. rent and a quarter of the mill of Framlington to be the right of Adam de Doxford; for this Adam gave them 14 marks of silver.³ In 1275-1276, John, son of Alan de Eslington, brought an action against Alexander de Eslington.⁴ John de Reigate and William de Northburgh were appointed to take the assize of novel disseisin between the said parties.⁵ In Michaelmas term, 1275, Adam de Doxford of Framlington brought an action against Roger de Alneham for the suit of his mill of Framlington, and a similar action against Thomas Brian.⁶ In Michaelmas, 1278, Adam de Doxford brought an action against William de Framlington for one messuage and 8 acres of land in Framlington.⁷ At the Northumberland Assizes in 1279, William de Doxford and Matilda his wife, Roger Daunsel and Alice his wife, Michael de Rok and Matilda his wife, Hugh de Tyndeleye and Margery his wife claimed certain lands in Framlington against Adam de Doxford as the right of the said Matilda, Alice, Matilda, and Margery.⁸ An action brought by John, son of Alan de Eslington, against Alexander de Eslington was not proceeded with.⁹

Disputes having arisen between John de Eslington and Robert de la Chaumbre, formerly the king's escheator, who had taken into the king's hands certain of John's lands in Framlington, the escheator was ordered, September 16th, 1280, to hold an inquisition concerning the said lands. An inquisition was accordingly held at Framlington on the Sunday after April 25th, 1281. The jurors say :

That Robert de la Chaumbre, formerly escheator, took 120 acres of land of John de Eslington in Framlington into the hand of Henry III., maliciously and without reasonable cause, because John was unable to cultivate the land (the escheator saying that the said land was waste) and unable to bring suit against the king for its recovery; it has been in the king's hand for ten years. It is not worth to the king more than 8s. yearly, being barren and uncultivated. As to John's right to the land, the way that John de Eslington, grandfather of the said John his heir, enfeoffed of the said 120 acres of land Alan de Eslington and Emma his wife, father and mother of John, both of whom died in the lifetime of John the grandfather, who, on account of the minority of John the plaintiff, took him and his land into his custody. And because John, senior, held the manor of Eslington of the king in chief, the said escheator took into the king's hand after his death, not only that manor but also the manor of Framlington. When John the plaintiff came of age and did homage to the king and had seisin of his lands by the king's order, the said escheator took into the king's hand the said 120 acres of land for the first reason, and there they are still in the king's hand.¹

Three years later an inquisition taken at Whittingham on the Sunday before March 12th, 1283/4, found that Alan de Eslington (Asclinton) had one messuage and 120 acres of land in Framlington of the gift of his father, John de Esselington, held of Roger Bertram. He held no land of anyone except of his said father, to whom he paid 1d. yearly for the said land. John de Esselington is his son and heir, aged 34 years. The said John de Esselington, father of Alan and grandfather of John who now is, seised the said land immediately after Alan's death, and held it in his custody by reason of the minority of the heir, and died so seised of the custody. It is worth 8s. and no more because poor and uncultivated. After the death of the said John, the grandfather, who held the manor of Esselington of the king in chief, a certain Nicholas de Acketon, sub-escheator of Sir William Latimer, then escheator beyond Trent, seised all the lands held by John, and because the premises in Framlington, which he held in custody, were in his hands when he died the said Nicholas seised them and so they have ever since been in the king's hands.²

John de Eslington died soon after. An inquisition taken three weeks after Easter, 1293, states that he held one messuage and 60 acres of land in Framlington, worth 30s. yearly, for which he did homage to Robert de Stutevill and Eleanor his wife and suit to the court of Mitford. His son Robert de Esselinton was 22 years of age and upwards.³

Amongst the many landowners in Framlington who gave lands to the prior and convent of Brinkburn were, Scirgtha, widow of Galfrid Turner,⁴ Richard Brunthyng and his brother Mildred Pigace,⁵ William Pyon and his sons Richard and John,⁶ Richard de Crauroke and his son William,⁷ John, son of Simon,⁸ William of Glanton, and others.⁹

Sir William de Framlington, knight, was one of the jury at the Northumberland assizes held at Newcastle, January 14th, 1292/3, in a suit in which Gilbert de Umframvill claimed certain liberties in Redesdale.¹ In 1301 the prior of Brinkburn brought an action against Adam de Benton and Beatrice his wife about tenements in Uvere (Over) Framlington.² At the request of Joan, countess of Gloucester and Hertford, the king's daughter, a pardon was granted, August 23rd, 1304, to William Page of Framlington, who had killed Roger Fomyng of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.³ And on June 20th, 1329, Robert de Ribill received a pardon for acquiring in fee from Richard de Framlynton, certain land in Heaton and Byker.⁴ On the 20th April, 1336, Richard Flane of Horton and Margaret his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas de Boroughdon, paid a fine of 10s. for pardon for their trespasses, and for those of the said Thomas, who in the time of Edward II. had acquired in fee lands in Whitelawe and Cramlington from Margery, widow of William de Framlington and Richard her son.⁵

In an inquisition taken at Whittingham on the Sunday after January 13th, 1349/50, on the death of Robert de Eslington, he is stated to have done fealty for his lands, May 26th, 1327, relief for his lands being pardoned by writ under the great seal, 20th February, 1334/5, on account of the great damage he had sustained through the Scottish wars, his lands having been distrained for relief from 1326 to 1335. A third part of Eslington was held in dower by his father's widow, Christina. His heirs were his three daughters: Christina, aged 16, Elizabeth, aged 14, and Isabel, aged 12 years.¹

In an inquisition taken at Newcastle on Monday, after August 10th, 1352, after the death of George, son and heir of Robert de Esselynton, who was the king's ward and died a minor on October 10th, 1349, having survived his father only three days, it is stated that he died seised of the manor of Eslington, of common of pasture and of digging peats on the moor of Edlingham, of taking cartloads of wood in Edlingham wood, and of the services of John de Eslington of a moiety of a knight's fee from his lands in Framlington. Elizabeth and Isabel were his sisters and heirs, aged respectively thirteen years and eleven years; Christina was not mentioned.²

On November 1st, 1352, a writ was issued to the sheriff to summon William de la Vale and his wife Christina, daughter of Robert de Eslington, to show cause in the court of chancery why George de Eslington's lands should not be divided between Gilbert Heron and Elizabeth his wife and Isabel, there being no mention of Christina in the inquisition taken after his (George's) death.³

Robert de Eslington's widow, Elizabeth, married Sir John Heron, and in the time of Edward III. recovered her dower in chancery. The three co-heiresses, of whom Isabel married Robert de Bowes, by a series of complicated transactions conveyed Eslington to Donald Heselrige and Joan his wife;⁴ but the details must be reserved for the account of Eslington in the parish of Whittingham.

By a deed dated June 25th, 1354, Constance, daughter of John de Eshlynton, granted to William de Routh all her lands and tenements in Over-Framelynton which came to her by hereditary right after the death of her brother Thomas de Eshlynton.⁵

In 1360 Richard de Doxford, son and heir of Adam de Doxford, had lands in Framlington.¹ The free tenants of Framlington in 1309 rendered 11s. 8d. yearly for castle ward to Mitford.²

On January 15th, 1385/6, Loretta de Boterie of Alnmouth conveyed her lands in the vill of Framlington to John de Warton.³ Of this lady, who was a daughter of Galfrid de Goswick and ancestress of the Middlehams of Alnmouth, something has been said in the second volume of this work.⁴ Her grave cover was unearthed at Alnwick Abbey in 1884 and is figured in Archæologia Acliana (vol. x. p. 194).

Isabel, widow of William Swan, died December 28th, 1429, seised of one husbandland and two cottages in Framlington, held of Sir Henry Percy of Athol, knight (lord of the manor of Mitford). Her heir was her son William Swan, who was 21 years of age and upwards.⁵ In the inquisition taken at Newcastle, December 10th, 1432, after the death of Sir Henry Percy of Athol, it is stated that he was seised in fee tail of the castle and manor of Mitford, with the castle-ward of Framlington, by the gift of John Lincoln, clerk, and Walter Topelyff to Thomas Percy the younger and Elizabeth his wife, father and mother of the said Henry, who was their heir in fee tail. The rent of the free tenants of Framlington for castle-ward was 6s. 8d. His heirs were his two daughters, Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Burgh, esq., and Margaret.⁶

By a deed dated January 6th, 1489/90, Sir John Middleton, knight, of Belsay, William Musgrave of Ryal, gent., and Sir William Horsley of Newcastle, chaplain, the feoffees of John Bellingham of the Hirst in the parish of Woodhorn, released to John Bellingham, son and heir of Robert Bellingham of Kirkheaton, and Margaret, daughter of George Cresswell of Newbegin, gent., lands in Framlington and Newbegin.⁷

Since the time of James I. the township has been held chiefly by small freeholders who mustered largely at contested elections. In 1710 eighteen freeholders in the township of Framlington voted at the election for a knight of the shire; in 1716 there were seventeen; in 1722 twenty-three names have been preserved; in 1731 there were seven, in 1748 nineteen, in 1774 twenty-eight, and at the great contested election of 1826 thirty-five voters, all freeholders.

Framlington common was enclosed and divided in 1855 under the 'Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange and Improvement of Land.' Thomas Arkle of Elsdon, the valuer appointed for the purpose, by his award dated August 10th, 1855, after setting out public and private roads, the site of a public pond, etc., gave 125 acres, 3 roods, 20 poles to Rear Admiral Robert Mitford, lord of the manor, equal in value to one-sixteenth of the residue, for his consent, also all mines and minerals. The names of the freeholders who received allotments in lieu of rights of common of pasture appurtenant to their lands and tenements will be of interest :¹

In 1721 James Fenwick of Morpeth acquired lands in Framlington by his marriage with Catherine, daughter and co-heir of John Wilkinson of Morpeth and his wife Barbara, daughter and co-heir of William Wilson of Framlington. He was a Roman Catholic, and not impossibly a member of the Roman Catholic family of Fenwick of Blagdon, a place less than six miles from Morpeth, who sold and left it about 1692.¹

The family have steadily augmented their estate in Framlington by successive purchases until at the present time it comprises 2,858 acres.²

² Dr. J. C. J. Fenwick's estate comprises Embleton-hall, Embleton-steads, the Hall-hill, Canada, Knogley, Small-dean, Muncaster-steads, part of Low Framlington, Long Row, Mount Pleasant, the Shaws, etc. Over the door of a disused cottage on Dr. Fenwick's farm of North End is the following inscription, in raised letters, J. ^A₁₆₉₃ M, enclosed within a heart incised in the stone.

1721, 16th March. Conveyance from Francis Brandling of Bilton Banks to Thomas Embleton of a burial place in Shilbottle church, formerly belonging to the family of Brandling. Dr. J. C. J. Fenwick's deeds.

The property called Embleton-hall belonged to John Wardle in 1675,¹ and in 1730 it was conveyed by a person of that name to Thomas Embleton,² the representative of a yeoman family settled at Shilbottle for many generations.

On August 23rd, 1780,³ Robert Embleton conveyed his property to Thomas Storer, George Wilson, and James Railston, as trustees to sell the same. After passing through other hands it was purchased by one of Dr. Fenwick's predecessors. In 1893 Dr. Fenwick enlarged the house, retaining the old structure as a wing, and has since that time made it his residence.

A tenement at Long Framlington, parcel of the lands granted by the Crown in 1609 to Justinian Povey and Robert Morgan, was by them conveyed to George Ward of London, who reconveyed to Gilbert Errington of the Middle Temple. On May 31st, 1609, Errington sold it to Thomas Johnson, who by will dated August 10th, 1622, gave his lands to his wife Isabel. In 1626 it was disposed of by the latter to Thomas Jackson of Healeycote, whose descendant, Isaac Jackson of North Shields, chirurgion chandler, on March 12th, 1677/8, by feoffment with livery of seisin, conveyed it to William Cresswell of Cresswell,⁴ William Lewen of Amble Hopelouse being party to the deed. By his will dated May 18th, 1749, William Cresswell devised his lands at Framlington and elsewhere to William Cresswell of Woodhorn demesne in tail male, whose son John Cresswell of Cresswell, by lease and release dated 1st and 2nd March, 1776,⁵ conveyed this estate to William Fenwick, ancestor of Dr. J. C. J. Fenwick, the present owner.⁶

⁴ The Cresswells were connected with Framlington many years before 1678, as is shown by the following will:

1609, 13th December. Will of Lancelot Cresswell of parish of Framlington. To be buried in the church of Framlington. To my eldest son Humphrey, lands and tenements in Longframlington, also my cottage or tenement which I bought of William Cresswell. To son George Cresswell foure oxen. Executor, the said Humphrey Cresswell. Witnesses to will, Lancelot Manners and John Lighton. Proved June 30th, 1612. Durham Probate Registry.

1627, 6th September. Administration of the personal estate of Humphrey Cresswell of the parish of Framlington granted to Isabella the widow: his children William, Agnes, John and Barbara under age. Raine, Test. Dunelm.

⁶ All from Dr. Fenwick's deeds and a schedule of deeds in the Rev. John Hodgson's Collection.

Another property in Framlington now belonging to Dr. Fenwick was once the property of the family of Wilson.

At the west end of the village is a small plain-looking house, standing in a walled garden, with the following inscription over the door: T. W. M. 1717; the initials of the names of Thomas and Mary Wardle. The estate, comprising the farms of Mount Pleasant and the Shaws in Framlington, part of St. Margaret's in the parish of Alnwick, and a tithe rent charge issuing out of Rugley was sold in 1896 by the trustees of the will of Mrs. Ann Tate,¹ the last of her family, who died in 1825, and the sale moneys paid into the Court of Chancery. The house was purchased by Mr. John Clark, and Mount Pleasant and the Shaws by Dr. Fenwick.

¹ Mrs. Ann Tate by her will dated August 13th, 1824, gave her property to the natural daughter of her deceased brother and to her issue. The trust having failed in 1896, it is yet to be decided who is entitled to the reversion.

When the co-heiresses of John Manners of Newmoor-house made a partition of their father's estate they agreed to sell off certain lands for the payment of charges, etc. By lease and release dated December 20th and 21st, 1769, the four ladies, with others, conveyed lands in Framlington, now represented by the Low Hall farm, to Thomas Harle of Morpeth for the sum of £3,200. By his will dated April 13th, 1801, Thomas Harle gave his property at Morpeth, Crookden and Long Framlington to his brother George Harle in tail male, with remainders to his brother William Harle, his grandnephew Thomas Atkinson and others. The testator died in 1804 and George Harle the brother in 1807, when the grandnephew Thomas Atkinson succeeded and assumed the name of Harle. His only son, Thomas Atkinson Harle, who died in his father's lifetime, by his will dated November 6th, 1847, gave his lands at Framlington Low Hall, subject to his father's life interest, to his mother for life, and after her death to his four sisters,¹ the survivor of whom, Miss Barbara Harle of Angerton, is the present owner.²

The lands in Low Framlington, for which Dr. Fenwick of Brinkburn was assessed at £40 per annum in 1663, continued to form part of the Brinkburn estate until 1747, when they were given by the will of John Fenwick of Brinkburn, Stanton and Bywell, to his second son John Fenwick,³ who, as John Fenwick of Gray's Inn, voted at the election of knights of the shire in 1748 for lands in Framlington, and as of Leith Walk at the election of 1774. His grandson, the Rev. John Peregrine Lascells Fenwick, and his son John Robert Powell Fenwick sold their property at Low Framlington on July 12th, 1841, to Mr. Isaac Cookson, whose son, the late Mr. John Cookson, in 1883 re-sold the same to Dr. J. C. J. Fenwick.⁴

One of the oldest families of Framlington was that of Alder. Some members were tenants there under the prior and convent of Brinkburn. The will of Edward Alder of Long Framlington, dated December 20th, 1587, is to be found in the Probate Registry at Durham with those of

William Alder¹ of Low Framlington built the farmhouse there and caused the inscription, w.^{A.E.} 1750, to be placed over the door. By his will dated December 1st, 1768, he gave his premises in High and Low Framlington to his sons John and Gilbert, both of whom were merchants in London. In 1858 the estate was sold by the Rev. Gilbert Alder of Hurstbourne Farrant, Hampshire, son of the above-named Gilbert, and by his daughter Sarah Elizabeth, wife of the Rev. J. M. R. Rawlings, her cousin Diana, daughter of Mr. Peter Cator of Beckenham, Kent (the two ladies being devisees under the will of Daniel Alder of London, merchant, only son of the above-named John Alder), and other persons, to Mr. William Robinson of Glantlees, who soon afterwards re-sold this part of Low Framlington to Mr. George Tate of Guyzance East House. This property, with the adjoining estate of Elyhaugh, now belongs to Mr. John Tate of Newbiggin.²

In the partition of the lands of John Manners amongst his four daughters in 1764, the farms of Canada and Small-dean seem to have been awarded to Ann, wife of Robert Alnwick,³ who at one time resided at Elyhaugh, and later at Felton Peth-foot. Mrs. Alnwick died without issue in 1807, and these farms became the property of her niece Jane, wife of James Fenwick, ancestor of Dr. Fenwick, the present owner.

By a deed dated November 19th, 1546, William Greyne, esq., conveyed the Long Row to James Carr,⁴ and on July 28th, 1560, it was conveyed by Robert Carr to John Bylton.⁵ It was sold by Robert Bylton, November 11th, 1589, to Robert Heselrigg,⁶ and in 1663 Mr. Haslerigg of Swarland was rated for this estate at £6 per annum.⁷

With the Snook-bank and the Greens, the Long Row was given by Robert Heselrigg of Morpeth to his wife Hannah, who by a deed dated October 15th, 1731, gave her freehold estates at Long Row and the Greens, with her leasehold lands at Overshields, to trustees for her daughter Dorothy, wife of Richard Metcalf of Newcastle, tinplate worker.⁸ On ¹ This William Alder was brother of Daniel Alder of the Mountain in the parish of Whittingham, agent of the Forsters of Adderston and receiver in chancery of the Adderston estates. Daniel Alder died June 14th, 1785, possessed of lands at Escomb, co. Durham, and at Framlington, Glanton, Rothbury, which by his will dated May 26th, 1785, he gave to his grandnephew, Daniel Alder of London.

August 31st, 1736, Dorothy Metcalf and the surviving trustee of her mother's settlement, with her son Heselrigg Metcalf of Newcastle and her daughter Anne, wife of Robert Chambers of Newcastle, and others, conveyed the Long Row to Richard Grieve of Alnwick.¹ It remained part of the Swarland² estates until 1874, when it was purchased by Dr. Fenwick.

At the dissolution of Brinkburn priory John Alder occupied Snook-bank as tenant at will at the rent of 14s. Before the end of the sixteenth century it had been acquired by Thomas Carr of Ford, who by deed dated August 23rd, 1599, conveyed it to Robert Heselrigg of Swarland.³ In 1663 the Snuke-bank was assessed to 'Mr. Haslerigg of Swarland' at £6 per annum.⁴

Proved 1769. Raine, Test. Dunelm.

Mr. Robert Mannors and Mr. Widdrington of Hauxley were rated for Nimmer's-hous and Hesley-dean, in 1663, apparently at £30 per annum.¹ It was also the residence of William Widdrington, second son of Henry Widdrington of Hauxley, two of his children being born there and baptised at Felton in 1653 and 1665 respectively.²

John Manners of Newmoor-house died in June, 1739, leaving issue four daughters, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann and Margaret, co-heiresses of their father's estates at Newmoor-house, Small-dean, Long Framlington and Acton.³ As has been already mentioned,⁴ an Act of Parliament was procured, 19 George II., to permit the sale of Acton and to make an effectual conveyance of the same. The four co-heiresses, on February 27th, 1764, entered into articles of agreement for the sale of certain lands in Framlington, for the division of the proceeds of such sale, and for the division of Newmoor-house and Small-dean,⁵ etc., the division to be made by the award of John Brown of Kirkharle, gent., Gabriel Redhead of the Lee, gent., Daniel Alder of Mountain, gent., and Samuel Marriot of Hexham, gent. The commissioners so appointed made their award April 23rd, 1764. They gave to Miss Jane Manners the Village farm, etc.; to Miss Elizabeth Manners the mansion and premises called the Hall-farm, etc.; to Ann, wife of Robert Alnwick, the West Smiddy-hill field, the East Smiddy-hill field, Oxtree close, Whiteshank, the Folds, New Thornington, etc., which together comprised about 311 acres and was called Framlington

North farm; and to Margaret, then wife of John Manners, the farm called South farm, etc.¹

The Misses Jane and Elizabeth Manners sold Newmoor-house in 1774 to John Ilderton of Alndyke for £6,400, as is proved by a codicil which the purchaser added to his will, November 10th, 1774, by which he gave the newly-purchased property to his cousin Robert Ilderton of Westoe.² The latter died in 1792 and was succeeded by his kinsman Charles Ilderton of Newcastle, attorney, whose son Sanderson Ilderton sold Newmoor-house about 1806 to Alexander Davison of Swarland. At the sale of the Swarland estates, in 1874, Newmoor-house was purchased by Mr. William J. Robinson, its present owner.

The house, probably erected within a few years of 1700, is in a sheltered situation and is of stone. It is built in a pleasing manner with simple materials which give it a considerable amount of character. In plan it is shaped like the letter T; the hall and staircase occupying the central portion. The west facade is dignified, and has a doorway, with a classical cornice, supported on fluted doric pilasters. On one side of the door there are three windows and on the other four, with heavy projecting architraves. The other elevations are designed in a simpler style. In the house are a few fragments of unpretentious wood panelling.

The manorial mill of Framlington, often mentioned in the Newminster Chartulary, seems to have been beside the Newmoor-house-burn. The mill-race, near Newmoor-house, can still be traced, but the existence of the mill is almost forgotten.

FRAMLINGTON CHURCH.

By an undated charter, William de Framlington, who died about the year 1196, gave to God, the Blessed Mary, and St. John Baptist, in whose honour divine service is celebrated in the chapel of Framlington, five score acres of land in the field of Framlington, five acres of land in tofts and crofts in the said vill, and other privileges, to be held by the prior and canons of Brinkburn, to whom belonged the mother church of Felton.¹ In an ordinance relating to the vicarage of Felton made in 1260, the toft and croft in the vill of Framlington, occupied by the chaplain, are mentioned.² The dedication to St. John Baptist seems to have been wholly lost sight of by the time of the Reformation, for by his will dated May 13th, 1551, John Burrell desires to be buried 'in the quere of ye church of St. Marye of Framlington.'³ This is confirmed by the will of William Maners of Framlington dated March 2nd, 1572/3, in which he leaves his body 'to be buryed within my parishe churche of our Lady at Framlington.'¹ In 1552 the chapel possessed 'towe lytill belles.'² The names of a few of the stipendiary curates at the end of the sixteenth century and the beginning of the seventeenth have been preserved. John Earsdon, curate of Framlington, occurs in 1578,³ George Chandler, curate, in 1582, John Carr in 1583, Thomas Thompson in 1584, and Richard Barker in 1604.⁴ At the visitation held at Alnwick, June 20th, 1605, Agnes Fenwick was presented 'for calling the xxiv, foresworne traiters, and for her misbehaviour in ye church.'⁵ In 1663 it was stated that 'the chappell of Framlington is totally ruined and destitute.'⁶ On September 1st, 1727, it was 'agreed by the minister and chappell-wardens and twelve then present that a cess of twice the ancient rent⁷ be collected thro'out the chappelry of Long Framlington, for putting up seats in the west end of the chappell according to the archdeacon's directions and for other repairs ordered by him.'⁸

The small church consists of a nave, without aisles, and a short chancel. The nave walls have not been much interfered with, and preserve, in the south doorway and chancel arch, some interesting features of the last decade of the twelfth century, which from their similarity to much of the work at Brinkburn priory indicate that the masons who raised that beautiful building are responsible for the simple structure at Long Framlington.

The nave measures 43 feet 9 inches in length by 20 feet 8 inches in width, and the chancel 23 feet by 17 feet 3 inches. The walling of the nave is nearly all part of the original structure. The chapel was originally a building, lofty in proportion to its width, with windows placed high above the floor-level. The north wall contains two modern windows, but there are no indications of early ones. At the west end there is a broad projecting buttress flanked by small ancient round-headed windows, with widely splayed jambs. A double chamfered plinth course runs the length of the gable, and at the buttress has an additional double chamfered course. The south doorway and portions of the two windows of the south wall of the nave are ancient. The arch of the doorway is of three square orders, the inner one continuing to the ground and the two outer supported by detached shafts with rude transitional capitals. The outer order, now enclosed by the porch, once projected beyond the face of the wall, and no doubt had a gable similar to the nave door of Brinkburn, which forms such a characteristic and delightful feature of that church.

The chancel arch is of two square orders, towards both nave and chancel, and is supported by three detached shafts (see plan, supra), with carved capitals, having a suggestion of foliage and a square abacus which fixes the date of the work as transitional between Norman and Early English and about 1190. Of the chancel only a portion of the north wall appears to be original.

The porch is an addition to the church, and is entered by a pointed arch of two chamfered orders; it has a stone seat on either side.

The vestry is modern, but there is built into the north wall a two-light fourteenth century window, which is shown in Mr. F. R. Wilson's drawing in The Churches of Lindisfarne, published in 1870, as then in the south wall of the chancel, whence it has been removed in a so-called restoration in 1882.

The chapel possesses a modern silver chalice made in London, presented in 1864 by Mrs. Ames, and a silver paten presented in 1844 by the Rev. H. Ridley. There are two bells, one without inscription, the other made in 1725.¹

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In memory of John Manners Fenwick, esq., of Long Framlington, born 16 May, 1796, died 8 Feb., 1852.

This rent above said doth remaine in the hands above said and unpaid twelve years at the 25th of March, 1653. The last time it was payd was in the yeare 1641. By me, John Wardell, clerke. Framlington Register.

1826, May 30th. (This chapel) is in a very ruinous and disgraceful condition, the pews ruinous within and the walls ruinous and unseemly with filth and abomination without. I left instructions for temperate and reasonable repairs at first. Of the condition of the curate I have deemed it my duty to make a report to the bishop. He is a stipendiary curate to the vicar of Felton, but without a single farthing of stipend; he receives an ancient payment from the Crown of £6 1s., and a scanty and varying subscription of the inhabitants may produce about £30 per annum. For this he gives double duty on Sundays, the vicars pretending that by ancient custom they are only compelled to do or find duty at Framlington every third Sunday in summer and every fourth Sunday in winter, and this, too, with a population of 840. The chapel holds 250. The late good and generous bishop gave the curate £30 per annum, and he is reduced to teach the village school and to share the house and garden with the clerk, the parish making this disposition to whom the house belongs. The chapelry has parochial limits, which have been sometimes ridden. Alexander Davison of Swarland, esq., repairs the exterior of the chancel, and Mr. Fenwick, now resident at Long Witton, the interior. . . . The clerk is paid by 'groats' collected at Easter, and he has the churchyard, which is in a horrible state, intersected with paths and the receptacle of all the filth in the village and of the adjoining school-house. There is neither glebe nor parsonage. Archdeacon Singleton's Minute Book.

On February 23rd, 1891, by an Order in Council, the chapelry of Framlington was severed from Felton and, for ecclesiastical purposes, constituted, together with Brinkburn, a benefice and parish, to be known as Long Framlington with Brinkburn, with the chapel of Framlington as the parish church. The patronage was vested in the bishop of Newcastle. London Gazette, February 27th, 1891.

The endowment of the benefice was provided by the original Brinkburn fund raised at the instance of Archdeacon Sharp in 1766, with the accumulations, together amounting to about £7,000, which sum, by an order of the Court of Chancery, bearing date February 26th, 1890, in a suit, Calogam v. Bland, was ordered to be transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

CHAPELRY OF BRINKBURN.

The chapelry, parish or extra-parochial place of Brinkburn, with an area of 3,454 acres, is bounded by the parish of Felton on the north and east, by Long Horsley and Rothbury on the south, and by Rothbury on the west. It is divided into two unequal parts by the river Coquet and into three wards, Low Ward, High Ward, and South Side; the last two, for Poor Law purposes, were united in 1889.¹ The population in 1901 was 179.²

Besides the priory of Brinkburn the chapelry, or parish, contains the following homesteads, etc.; on the north side of the river, Weldon-hall, Weldon Bridge, High and Low Weldon, Healey Cote, Cockshot, and the Hope; and on the south side, Wester-heugh, Middle-heugh, Brink-heugh, and Thistlyhaugh.

The line of Watling Street has been already described.³ It crosses the Coquet about 1,300 yards east of the priory and 800 yards west of Weldon Bridge.⁴ Remains of a paved road breaking off from the Causeway and descending to the ruins of an ancient bridge about 250 yards below Brinkburn mill are still discernible.⁵ When the stones of a sepulchral mound or cairn, near High Thistleyhaugh, were taken away for draining purposes, about the year 1817, a cist formed of six stones, about 22 inches square, was discovered, containing an urn of reddish pottery filled with burnt bones.⁶ Not far distant was a similar cairn with similar contents. In another mound on the same farm a large flat stone about seven feet long and three feet wide was ploughed up; the soil beneath it was of a fine dark nature, differing from that which surrounded it.⁷

On the hill above the priory there is a camp which some have thought to be Roman. Sir David Smith, writing about eighty years ago, says :

² The Census Returns from the three wards are: 1801, 260; 1811, 209; 1821, 277; 1831, 235; 1841, 208; 1851, 225; 1861, 220; 1871, 252; 1881, 199; 1891, 160; 1901, 179.

The peninsulated hill above Brinkburn priory has been, according to tradition, the site of a Roman villa and small fort; the paved way or minor Watling Street, called the Devil's Causeway, running directly up to the old station which is on the point of the hill, immediately over the abbey, and for a few yards here and there, this old paved street is extremely visible, about five yards wide. The station is rather oblong than square, with its angles a little rounded off, 50 paces in length by 36 broad; at the north-east angle, a circular remain, as if of a tower. The neck of the peninsula has been fortified with a rampire and ditch, still very visible, and smaller 'casts' are discernible along the southern brow of the hill and a transverse one adjoining the station. The Devil's Causeway also leads down to the river (where the Roman bridge stood) in order to maintain its general direction, and one of the abutments is yet to be seen on the northern side of the river Coquet, below the large roots of an elm tree which project over it into the water, and it requires somebody who knows the spot to point it out. When the water is low, the foundation of the spot, or rock, upon which the two arches were thrown, is to be seen. This place is between the mill and the first hedge, at some distance below it.¹

The site of the priory is one of perfect seclusion. It lies on a small haugh between steep wooded banks of the river, which here makes a sharp bend. The bank on the opposite and south side of the river is rocky and precipitous, and on every side the place is embosomed in well-grown forest trees.²

It was already known by the name of Brinkburn when, in the reign of Henry I., William Bertram I. of Mitford, the founder of the house, selected it for the site of a convent of Augustinian or Austin canons.

The founder, with the consent of Hawys his wife and Roger his son (who each attached a cross to the charter) and that of his sons Guy, William and Richard, and in the presence of Richard the priest and Baldwin his son, Bertram de Pichedene, Carod and others, granted to 'dominus' Osbert Colutarius, possibly a master builder, a place called 'Brinkeburne,' that he might build there a monastery for Sir Ralph the priest and other his brethren of the monastery of St. Mary de Insula.³ As a provision for their maintenance the founder gave them Thornhalgh, Forderhalgh, Papwirthhalgh, Heley, Over Heley, etc., with twenty fish out of his fishery in the Coquet.⁴ At first the priory was apparently dedi-

William Bertram's son, Roger Bertram I., after endowing the canons with the church of Felton and other gifts,³ was buried in the church under a stone with the inscription: HIC . JACET . ROGERVS . BERTRAM . FVNDATOR.⁴ William Bertram II. confirmed the grants of his father and grandfather and added to the possessions of the convent.⁵ The canons also obtained valuable gifts of land in the parishes of Rothbury, Long Horsley, Felton, etc., from neighbouring owners, and in 1386 they acquired from Ralph Lord Greystoke the church of Long Horsley, the appropriation being confirmed by the bishop in 1391.⁶

Some seals of the Bertrams are preserved in the treasury at Durham and in the British Museum. The first is attached to a deed of the early part of the twelfth century by which Roger Bertram granted land at Ketton, co. Durham, to the prior and convent of Durham. It is round, $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches diameter. Horseman to left holding shield on right arm, the left arm raised behind him. SIGILLUM ROGERI BERTRANNI.⁷ Another seal is round, $1\frac{7}{8}$ inches diameter. Knightly horseman to the right; wearing hauberk of mail, surcoat, flat-topped helmet with vizor closed, sword and shield with arms. Horse caparisoned. Little is known of the history of the priory, except what can be learned from the chartulary.⁴ The names of the prior and canons appear in the Pipe Rolls of 1188, 1190, 1196, 1197 and 1202.⁵ On February 19th, 1200/1, King John, when at Hexham, granted a confirmation to the canons, and a charter of confirmation was granted on March 10th, 1252/3, by Henry III.⁶ For these favours the prior and convent agreed to give the king ten marks, which was long unpaid.⁷

In 1292 the prior of Brinkburn was assessed in £31 5s. 7d.,⁸ and two years later he established his right to free chase in Heleyhope, Linchwood (now Linn-wood) and West Rinside.⁹

About the year 1322 the prior and convent addressed a petition to the king praying for some relief on account of the losses they had sustained from the Scots.¹⁰

⁴ The chartulary is a small octavo volume, about 8½ in. by 5 in., in a fifteenth century binding. The face is divided into four panels having Sancta Maria Mater stamped across on each side. The first leaf has been cut out and the third partially destroyed since Dugdale extracted the foundation charter. Some charters—thirty-seven in number—are missing farther on. In 1585 the volume was in the hands of Thomas Bates of Morpeth (cf. Brinkburn Chartulary, p. xv.). Ro. Helme, writing to Henry, earl of Northumberland, 6th May, 1593, states that 'the bookes of the late monasteries of Alnewicke, Brenkborne and Newminster my lord your uncle's and my late lord your father's creation with his lordship's letters patente' had been delivered by the order of the earl's late father to Thomas Bates. (Duke of Northumberland's MSS.) This chartulary, with that of Newminster, seems to have been in the possession of Lord William Howard in 1630. It was afterwards in the possession of Thomas Astle, keeper of the records in the Tower, whose arms are stamped on the back of the cover; at his death it was sold to the marquess of Buckingham and afterwards acquired by Lord Ashburnham. It is now in the British Museum, where it is catalogued as Stow MS. No. 511. (Brinkburn Chartulary, p. xv.)

In further relief an order, made October 8th, 1331, on the treasurer and barons of the exchequer, discharged the prior and convent of £32 due to the exchequer for victuals purchased in Newcastle of the late king;¹ and on August 3rd, 1333, on account of their 'much depressed' state, Master Gilbert de Halghton, receiver of the king's victuals at Newcastle, was ordered to deliver to them twenty quarters of wheat.² On June 16th, 1334, in compliance with the petition of the prior,³ the king restored to them a rent of 16s. in Newcastle, given to the prior and convent by William de Felton in mortmain, which, having been given without the king's licence, had been taken into his hands by command of the king's justices.⁴

In 1340, Adam de Preston, canon of Brinkburn, was admitted to priest's orders.⁵ He was probably a kinsman of Ralph de Preston, who resigned the priorate in January, 1343.⁶ Robert de Wodehous' or Wodside, canon of Brinkburn, was admitted to priest's orders in 1344.⁷ Sir Robert de Morpeth, also a canon, was admitted acolyte in 1344, and sub-deacon in 1345.⁸

The canons were still complaining of poverty to the bishop of Durham in 1391,⁹ and in 1419, the convent having been raided and robbed of charters, muniments, books, chalices, vestments, ornaments and other goods, the evildoers were threatened by the bishop with the greater excommunication if the goods were not restored within twenty days.¹⁰

On July 25th, 1834,¹¹ in removing the debris of a burned wooden building which stood near the offices of the house and a little to the north-west of the church, there was a very important find of gold coins.

The hearthstone¹ had been removed, and the man who was throwing up the earth into a cart said to the man on the cart, 'That's the heaviest spadeful I ever threw up,' and the man on the cart, looking down, saw a pot of brass or bell metal.² There were between three and four hundred coins, comprising rose nobles of the first and second coinage of Edward III., half and quarter nobles of the same reign, and nobles of Richard II. The pot and some of the coins are still at Brinkburn, in the possession of Mrs. Hugh Fenwick. The Medal Room at the British Museum was enriched, by the gift of Major Cadogan, with specimens of the coins not before then in the collection; others were given away and some disposed of.³

A seal of the convent is preserved in the treasury at Durham cathedral. It is $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches by $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches, pointed oval. St. Peter, on the right, holding a book in his right hand, in the left hand his keys; on the left St. Paul, holding in the right hand a book, in the left hand a sword, each standing on a carved corbel. In base, under a round-headed arch, the prior kneeling in prayer, to the left. ✠ s' APLOR' . PETRI . ET . PAVLI . DE . BRINKEVRNE.¹ Several seals of the priors are in the treasury at Durham. The first, of the end of the twelfth century, is pointed oval, $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches by $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches. Tonsured figure seated adverse, side of chair seen on each side, holding cross in right hand and book to breast in left. ✠ GALFRIDVS PRIOR DE BRINKEBURNA. It is attached to an inspeximus by Galfrid, prior of Brinkburn, and others of charters of Robert, bishop of St. Andrews.² The second, imperfect, attached to a deed of John fitz Robert (died 1240), granting the chapel of St. Mary at Warkworth to the prior and convent of Durham, is rounded oval, $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches by 1 inch. Demi St. Peter adverse holding book in right and keys in left hand. Beneath, remains of a figure praying. A rosette on right side of face, another at left shoulder and a third beneath left hand. All in a canopied niche, a row of six rosettes on each side of niche. s' NICHOLA IS DE BRINK³ The third, appended to a document connected with the church of Ellingham, A.D. 1239, is oval, $1\frac{5}{8}$ inches by 1 inch. Hand issuing from left side of seal holding two keys. ✠ SIGILL' ALANI PRIORIS DE BRINKEVRNE.⁴ The fourth belongs to a document of William the prior and convent of Brinkburn connected with the church of Felton, A.D. 1248, and is oval, $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches by $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches. Prior seated, vested in chasuble, wearing mitre of a peculiar form, holds crosier outwards in left hand, the right is now wanting. SIGILL' WIL PRI . DE RRIN⁵ The fifth, appended to a document concerning an agreement between the prior of Evesham and the prior of Durham about Lytham in 1243, is oval, $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches by 1 inch. Figure standing adverse wearing chasuble and maniple, hands raised. . . . WILLI : PORIS : . . : BRINKEVRNE.⁶ The sixth, attached to a deed of 1521, is a privy seal

Michaelmas, 1536, for a term of 21 years, at the rent of £7 4s. 4d.¹ Before the expiration of this lease, September 29th, 1557, a lease for the term of 40 years from the date of the expiry of Carnaby's lease, was granted August 1st, 1546, to George Fenwick.²

On May 20th, 1550, Edward VI. granted the reversion in fee to John, earl of Warwick, 'to whom the government of the north has been committed, in compensation for his claim to the fourth part of the lands of Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, which he claims as next of kin and heir of Margaret, daughter of the said Richard.'³ Shortly afterwards the earl of Warwick was created duke of Northumberland and as such he obtained a confirmation of the grant, together with various estates in lieu of an annuity of 500 marks given him by Henry VIII., September 2nd, 1546.⁴ The grant reverted to the Crown on the duke's attainder in 1553.

In 1559, 'one Warcop' desired to purchase the site of Brinkburn, but Sadler,⁵ writing to Cecil from Berwick on December 10th of that year, protested that if the woods, worth, he was told, 1,000 marks, passed in the bargain, the queen would have no timber for the repair of Harbottle castle.⁶ He urged that the sale might be stayed or that the woods should be reserved.⁷ The protest either arrived too late or was disregarded, for on January 20th, 1559/60, in consideration of a sum of money paid, Thomas Reve and Nicholas Pynde of London, gentlemen, obtained a grant of the site of the late monastery of Brenkebourne, with two orchards belonging thereto, containing about one acre of land; the closes, etc., called Sterford-close, 6 acres; Burdge Flatte, 13 acres; Monntejoye Leez, 3 acres; Dokensflatte, 5 acres; Styrkeflatte, 10 acres; Stevenson Leez, 21 acres; Hallecote meadowe, 12 acres; Longhelee, 20 acres; Foderyehaughe, 20 acres; Hegleleez, 20 acres; a parcel of land called Brenkehaugh, on the west of the Hughe, with 30 acres of pasture there; the closes called the Parke, 30 acres; Burneside, 4 acres; a close of land and heath called Lynchewood-close, 40 acres; a house called the

Tannehouse and a barn adjoining the late monastery ; a water mill within the site ; a pasture called Lynchewood, 40 acres, all in Brenkeburne, then or theretofore in the tenancy of Cuthbert Carnaby and parcel of the possessions of the dissolved monastery, and of the clear yearly value of £7 4s. 4d., 'to hold of the king in chief by service of the twentieth part of one knight's fee.'¹

These grants in fee simple were made subject to the subsisting lease granted by Henry VIII., August 1st, 1546, for a term of 40 years, commencing at Michaelmas, 1557, at the yearly rent of £7 4s. 4d.,² which in 1569 was held by Tristram Fenwick as assign of George Fenwick. Having taken part in the Rising of the North, 'Tristram Fenwick of Brinkburn, gent.,' was attainted and his lands forfeited to the Crown.

LANDS OF THE EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND PURCHASED BY HIM IN FEE SIMPLE.

Rent of tenants in Brenkeborne. Tristram Fenwyk holds the whole site of the late Priory of Brenkeborne, together with all houses built thereon, and the following lands :—A close of land called Storiford close, a close of land called Byrdflatt, a close called Mountjoy, a piece of pasture called Domken flatte, a piece of arable land called Styrfkflatt, a close of land called Stevenson lee, a close of meadow called Holcot meadow, a parcel of meadow called Langhill, a parcel of meadow called Highlees, a parcel of meadow called Federy haugh with parcels of land lying within the same, a parcel of land called Brenkebaugh, a close of land called le Parke, a close of land called Burnesyde, a close of land called Lynchewood close, a pasture called Lynchewood, and herbage of a wood called Hopwood, and of a wood within the said close containing about forty acres 'de ranell,' a water corn mill and all 'le towne (tanne) howse with a barn ;' reserving to the Crown all great trees, etc. The said Tristram holds the premises as assign of George Fenwyke from Michaelmas, 5 Mary [1557], for term of forty years, as appears by indenture of Henry VIII., dated 1 August, 31 Henry VIII. [1546] ; paying for the site 62s. 4d., for the mill £4, and for 'le tonnehouse' 2s. ; total £7 4s. 4d.³

When Thomas Percy, nephew of the sixth earl, was created earl of Northumberland by a new patent dated May 1st, 1557, the queen gave to him Brinkburn, with the ancient estates of his family recently in the possession of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland. He seems to have also received Brinkburn, which had been forfeited by the duke.⁴ The seventh earl was beheaded August 27th, 1572. On May 22nd, of that year, the site of the monastery of Brinkburn, the mill, and the closes described by Hall and Humberston as 'late parcel of the possessions of Thomas, earl of Northumberland, convicted of high treason,' were sold for £761 to Ambrose, earl of Warwick, and Richard Bowland, gent., to hold of the queen as of the manor of East Greenwich by fealty only in free and common socage.¹

Four days later the earl of Warwick and Richard Bowland, by indenture of bargain and sale, dated May 26th, 1572, conveyed the site of the monastery and the lands and appurtenances belonging thereto, as set out in the queen's letters patent, to Sir John Forster, knight.² Sir John Forster, dying at Spindleston in 1602, was succeeded by his natural son, Nicholas Forster of Bamburgh, whose third son, Edward Forster of Elford, sold Brinkburn, April 18th, 1626, to George Fenwick, described as of Gray's Inn, Middlesex, gent.³

George Fenwick, the purchaser of Brinkburn, was entered at Gray's Inn in 1622, but embracing the tenets of the Puritan party, he went to North America in 1639, where his first wife died at Say-brook,⁴ and was buried in a field near the confluence of the Connecticut with Long Island Sound.⁵ Returning to England in 1644, he was elected in the following year to represent the borough of Morpeth in the Long Parliament, and that of Berwick in the Parliaments elected 1654 and 1656. Having served with distinction, in the armies of the Commonwealth he was appointed governor of Berwick in 1649, and was a principal instrument in the rebuilding of the parish church in that town, where there is a monument, or cenotaph, to his memory.⁶ He died March 15th, 1656/7, at Worminghurst in West Sussex, an estate he had obtained with or through his first wife.

To my nephew Thomas Ledgard and his heirs male, all my lands in Thriston and Trillington after the death of my wife; to my sister Ledgard and to my sister Cullick, £50 apiece; to my brother Ledgard and brother Cullick, £10 apiece; to my sister Cullick's children, £100 apiece; to my niece Chifton², £50; to my niece Bootflower's boy, £50; to my daughters Elizabeth and Dorothy, the lands in Sussex that descend to them from their uncle, Edward Apsley, esq., deceased. To Ralph Fenwick, now a scholar at Christ Church, Oxford, £10 per annum.

Codicil dated March 9th, 1656/7. To my sister Cullick and her children, all my lands, goods and chattels in New England; to the public use of the county of New England, £500, if my very loving friend Edward Hopkins think fit; to Dame Eleanor Selby of Berwick, £10, and the education of my daughter Dorothy; my antient acquaintance and dearly beloved friend Sir Thomas Widdington; to my friend and father-in-law, Sir Arthur Hescligge, 40s. to buy a ring, and to every one of his children for the like purpose, 40s. My father-in-law, Mr. Clavering, and Thomas Burrell of Brinkburn. My cousin Lawrence and his wife, my cousin Strickland and his ladie. My dear and good friend Mr. Edward Hopkins, late warden of the Fleet. To Tristram Fenwick, £6 per annum for life, Mr. Ogle of Leith, N.B., widow Clarke of Weldon. Proved April 27th, 1657, at Lewes, by Elizabeth Fenwick, the daughter and sole executrix.³

Having made provision for his widow and for his two daughters, Colonel George Fenwick gave Brinkburn and his lands at Framlington to his brother Claudius Fenwick, a physician in Newcastle, who, together with his sister-in-law's second husband, Philip Babington, was rated for Brinkburn in 1663 at £150 per annum.³ Doctor Claudius Fenwick continued to reside at Newcastle and died about 1669. Dr. Claudius Fenwick was succeeded by his son, George Fenwick, whose daughter and sole heir, Elizabeth, carried Brinkburn in marriage to Roger Fenwick of Stanton. Their eldest son, John Fenwick, having married Margaret, daughter and co-heir of William Fenwick of Bywell, united the three houses of Stanton, Brinkburn, and Bywell.¹

George Mark writing in 1734, says :

The parish of Brinkburn, containing about fifty-nine families, lies along the Coquet from Weldon to Brinkburn, which is the principal village of the whole parish, and famous for the magnificent remains of a stately monastery. It is situated on the north side of the Coquet, and immediately on the banks of that river. It stands low and by reason of the exceeding height of the banks, both on the north and south side, is utterly destitute of the advantage of an extensive prospect. There is a wooden bridge over the Coquet, and also a very good dwelling house and garden belonging to the Fenwicks of Bywell. The walls of the monastery are most of them standing, and demonstrate its antient magnificence. The covering is entirely gone, and it is used for the burying of the dead. The parish is annexed to the chapelry of Framlington.²

Although on the marriage of the heiress, Elizabeth Fenwick, in 1691 Brinkburn ceased to be the chief residence of the family, it seems to have continued to be occupied by her mother and her second husband, William Ramsay of Newcastle. 'Madam Ramsay' died September 29th, 1723,³ and was buried at Brinkburn under a stone, the inscription on which can still be traced. The house was afterwards occupied by Edward Ord of West Ord, whose first wife was a Fenwick, and after his death in 1745, by his second wife.¹

William Fenwick of Bywell, grandson of John and Margaret, having no issue, sold Brinkburn in January, 1792² to Joseph Hetherington of London for the sum of £20,500.³

Joseph Hetherington, the purchaser of Brinkburn, a native of Brampton in Cumberland, did not live to enjoy his purchase, but died on the 6th of September of the same year. By his will dated February 8th, 1792, after making provision for his widow, his father and mother and his half-sister Frances Cruben by annuities, he gave the manorial rights of Brinkburn to his only brother, John Hetherington of Intack⁴ in the parish of Brampton, and the estate of Brinkburn to that brother and to their sister Elizabeth, wife of George Tinniswood of Cumcatch in the parish of Brampton, as tenants in common. John Hetherington died in 1808, leaving Elizabeth, his only child and heiress, who became wife to Richard Hodgson of Moorhouse-hall, Burgh-by-Sands, who, in 1812, by purchase acquired the interest given to Mrs. Tinniswood and subsequently, in 1825, sold Brinkburn to Ward Cadogan of Pickerings in the island of Barbados, but at that time residing at Clifton near Bristol.

Mr. Ward Cadogan, who died in 1833, by his will dated September 29th, 1831, devised his estates of Brinkburn, Pickerings, etc., in trust for his only child Sarah, who had married in 1826 Major William Hodgson, the son, by his first marriage, of Mr. Richard Hodgson, from whom Mr. Cadogan had purchased the estate.

After her father's death, Mrs. William Hodgson, together with her husband, assumed the name of Cadogan, and on her death was succeeded by her only son, the late Mr. Cadogan Hodgson Cadogan. The latter died in 1888, and his eldest son, Mr. Arthur Hodgson Cadogan, who died unmarried in 1896, devised Brinkburn to his sister, Mrs. Hugh Fenwick, the present owner.

THE CHURCH.

The buildings of the Augustinian priory¹ now remaining belong almost entirely to the church, and comprise an aisleless choir, transepts, each with two eastern chapels, a nave with a north aisle, and a central tower.

There are some small portions of the chapter house and cloisters still left, and a cellar below the modern residence erected to the south of the church is probably part of the undercroft of the refectory.

In 1858 the church, which was without a roof and to some extent in ruins, was 'restored.'¹ The south-west angle of the nave was rebuilt; new roofs and tiled floors were provided, glass was put into the windows, and the building was made suitable for the performance of divine service, which has been continued up to the present time. During the restoration two features of peculiar interest were destroyed when a room which had been added over the choir and an additional storey over the nave aisle were removed. Records of these fortunately remain in drawings and photographs (see p. 479).

The erection of the church at Brinkburn appears to have extended over a period exceeding a quarter of a century, and was commenced a few years before the end of the twelfth century. It is a very fine example of the transitional period following on the Norman, simple and dignified in its proportions, and containing work which is beautiful and varied in its details and general effect. Brinkburn in its artistic features may be compared with Hexham and Tynemouth, though they each possessed a marked individuality. The three were erected about the same period, and may be favourably compared with work of the same date in other parts of England; they all testify to the high architectural skill then employed in Northumberland. Although early forms such as the round arch, the square abaci to the capitals, and ornaments essentially Norman abound, these features are intermixed throughout with details distinctly Early English in style so as to forbid any exact line being laid down as to the order in which the building of the church proceeded. The commencement of the work appears to have begun with the choir.

The choir, which has never undergone alteration, is planned on a small scale, and measures from the east end to the crossing 34 feet 3 inches by 22 feet 8 inches. The east elevation is well designed, with good mouldings and details; it is three tiers in height, each containing a triplet of windows divided by buttresses which are square below the lower sill, and become semi-octagonal, then keel-shaped and finish in a semi-round capping; the external angles of the gable are enclosed in flat buttresses weathered at the top. The plinth is of two chamfered courses with a torus over them. The two lower tiers of windows are pointed lancets, with chamfered jambs, the arches being moulded and supported on banded nook shafts with moulded capitals having round and square abaci. The windows of the uppermost tier are semi-circular headed, with simple chamfered jambs, head, and label. The side walls have two tiers of windows, two below and three above, the former with pointed heads and the latter round, both having chamfered labels. The windows are divided by flat buttresses terminating under a corbelled eaves-course. The interior jambs of the side windows are merely splayed, the lower east-end windows being moulded on the angles and the middle tier divided by banded shafts with carved capitals supporting moulded arches and labels. A moulded string passes below the sill on both the interior and exterior. In the south wall is a double pointed piscina on a projecting moulded shelf, and in the north wall is an inserted shouldered door once opening into a sacristy, whence a staircase led into the triforium of the north transept. The roof erected by Mr. Cadogan in 1858 represents the original pitch of the early thirteenth century roof as is indicated by the weathering stones on the tower, but to effect its construction a quantity of ashlar walling, which then stood eight or ten feet in height on the north and south walls, was destroyed. The openings between the transept chapels and the choir are spanned by pointed arches of two chamfered orders with a label, and spring from semi-round responds with moulded bases on square plinths on the south side and round ones on the north.

Each transept consists of two bays, the aisles forming chapels once divided by wooden screens, the holes where the beams were inserted being still visible. In the south chapel of the south transept is a piscina and near to it a moulded stone shelf. Each chapel is vaulted and is lighted by a small lancet window. The small ogee window in the north chapel was inserted about the middle of the fourteenth century. The two wings strikingly exhibit a great variety in their details. The constructive arches are of two chamfered orders with labels towards the transepts, supported on octagonal piers and responds with moulded caps and bases. In the triforium there is only one couplet of round arches with bold mouldings on nook shafts with square capitals which display an early form of the transitional volute. The triforium arches are placed over the pier and not as is usual over the arch below. The clerestory windows are also round-headed and correspond with the arches of the arcade. A very striking feature on the exterior of the north transept is a square turret enclosing a circular newel staircase which runs boldly up the centre of the gable between four windows, the two lower having pointed and the upper round heads. The end of the south transept abuts on the claustral buildings and has only two round-headed windows placed high in order to clear the roof of the range of buildings enclosing the cloister court on its eastern side. In the south-western angle, and about eleven feet above the floor level, there is a small shouldered door which led from the dormitory on to the night stairs; both on the interior and exterior are holes for timbers at this level, and on the exterior are stone corbels for supporting the roof. On the west side the north transept is lighted by windows in two stages, and in the south transept by two windows placed high in order to clear the cloister roof. A doorway of simple design opens from the cloister on to the south transept.

The arches at the crossing, supporting the low central tower, are of fine proportions and very lofty. They are of two orders, with pear-shaped rolls at the angles, and have label mouldings on each face; the arches spring from substantial piers arranged in groups of three shafts on each face, the centre shaft, keel-shaped in plan, is placed between two circular ones. Towards the transepts all the shafts are continued to the ground, but towards the choir the centre member terminates on a bracket placed fourteen feet above the ground level, whilst towards the nave all are stopped at that height, the wall face below being on the same plane as the nave piers to enable the stall work of the conventual choir to pass without interruption. The position of the choir was, as is usual, below the crossing and between the nave and so-called choir or presbytery. The rood screen was placed, in all probability, below the western arch, separating the nave from the space below the tower, which was thus included in the choir; this would account for the necessity of the door opening from the cloister court into the south transept.

The nave, with its single aisle on the north side, is a very beautiful composition. The aisle is divided from the nave by six pointed arches of two chamfered orders and a label, springing from octagonal piers with moulded capitals and bases. The triforium-range placed between moulded string courses comprises five couplets of semi-circular headed openings, corresponding to the piers of the arcade below; the arches, of two orders, are simply moulded and carried on slight shafts.

The clerestory is of six simple round-headed lights placed over the arcade arches. There are holes in the walls between each light, intended, possibly, to receive the roof timbers.

It is not clear whether the aisle roof was ever vaulted, although a good deal of preparative work for that purpose was carried out. On the inside of several of the pier-capitals a sort of springer stone is carved, and in the north wall are several stone brackets, on many of which are two or three voussoirs of the vaulting ribs; at the east end also, as will be observed on the plan, a special shaft is provided at the back of the north-west tower-pier for a diagonal rib, but the corbels and springer stones vary so greatly—some chamfered and others moulded—and are so irregularly placed as to warrant the conjecture that the vaulting was never executed. The aisle is lighted by five plain windows, and is entered by a north door of excellent design with rich transitional details. The south wall of the nave contains five tall plain round-headed lights set high in the wall above the level of the pent roof surrounding the cloister, and has also the usual doors at the east and west end of the nave opening on to the cloister.

The fully developed Early English west front is strikingly beautiful; it is pierced by three lofty lancet windows, between which are blank arches of equal height and more acutely pointed, supported by double-banded detached shafts, all effectively moulded and almost identical with those of the west front of Lanercost priory. An arcade of seven arches of similar design occupies the lower stage below the windows, and the angles of the gables are enclosed with square buttresses continued as turrets with pyramidal caps. The south-west angle contained a newel stair which afforded access to the gallery passing across the west end at the window level and leading to the triforium over the north aisle.

On the exterior, the north door, set in a gabled projection, is round-headed, of three orders, the inner order continuing to the ground and the two outer ones supported on nook shafts; each order is enriched with beak-head, chevron and billet ornament. Within the gable is a graceful triplet of trefoil-headed arches on detached shafts, having moulded capitals with square abaci. The angles between the shafts and at the corners of the projection have dog-tooth ornament. The two doors on the south side of the nave are dissimilar, the easternmost one has ornamental work of an earlier character than that of the other, which is twice shafted, with details similar to those of the west front.

The tower is a low one; it is finished with a simple parapet, placed only a few feet above the ridge level of the adjoining roofs.

During the fourteenth century the nave aisle wall was raised and doubtless covered with a flat roof in a similar manner to the choir (see p. 479). A great deal of this remained until 1858, and some carefully measured drawings by the late Mr. H. T. Austin show one complete small pointed window and the sills and jambs of others. A very commodious chamber was provided by the additional height thus obtained. Whether the chamber constructed in the choir roof by the raising of the side walls¹ was of the same period as the addition to the aisle roof it is difficult to say. Similar chambers in a like position exist at

THE NORTH DOOR.

Tynemouth and Christchurch, and whether they were used as store-places for valuables, for a library, or for some other purpose, they afforded at Brinkburn additional accommodation where available space was very limited on its restricted site.

Another curious feature is noticeable in the same illustration (see p. 479), viz., the filling in of the large lancet windows in the lower stage of the choir with a mullion and transoms. These insertions were removed in 1858.

Of the claustral buildings little is left. The cloister garth occupied the usual position on the south-west of the church and measured about 73 feet east to west and 65 feet north to south.

In the south nave wall, towards the cloister court, is a particularly fine arcade of trefoil-headed arches with good mouldings on detached shafts, and near to the door of the south transept is a double aumbry. There is a projecting ledge over the arcade supporting a wall plate, to which the timbers of the roof of the cloister walk were secured.

The east side of the cloister south of the transept was occupied by the dormitory; it communicated with the church by the door in the south wall of the transept which opened on to the night stairs. A series of projecting corbels below the transept windows supported the roof, whilst below is the outline of the vaulting of a passage in the position usually occupied by the slype, which served for a communication between the cloister and the cemetery, placed, as is customary, to the east of the cloister; it was, however, with greater probability a passage or vestibule leading to the chapter house, as is the case at Bolton, Yorkshire, which possesses many features in common with Brinkburn.

On the south side, the cloister was bordered by the refectory, the site of which is occupied by the present mansion house. A segmental vaulted chamber in the cellars with recesses and a shouldered doorway were undoubtedly parts of the original undercroft of the refectory. On the west side of the cloister court there are no remains of ancient buildings.

Evidence of fresco work, comprising letters and scroll work, are found on the north transept and south nave walls.

On a stone preserved in the church is carved an Agnus Dei, and there are several detached capitals of varying design, chiefly cushion shaped, dressed on three sides; they may have been used on an arcade in the chapter house or some other building, or in pairs as twin capitals to an open cloister. An altar stone, several fragments of old glass, and some flooring tiles finished with a rough green glaze, are also preserved about the church.

The mill-race still flows between the site of the refectory and the river Coquet, and is indicated on the plan. About 130 yards to the east is the site of the abbey mill, and in the masonry of the cottages now erected where the mill stood is a quantity of re-used medieval stonework, whilst the abutment wall seems to be entirely old.

AGNUS DEI.

Across a level haugh to the north-west of the priory, where the river bends again to the west and forms a loop, there are indications of a channel or pass and depressions which are believed to be the site of the priory fish ponds.

As the convent had a definite ecclesiastical district attached to it, divine service was not discontinued at the dissolution of the priory in 1536. By letters patent issued May 16th, 1552, Edward VI. appointed the duke of Northumberland, Lord Ogle, Sir Thomas Grey, Cuthbert Horsley and Robert Horsley commissioners for Northumberland, to take an account of goods belonging to churches, fraternities, etc., for the prevention of further embezzlement of the same.¹ On the 18th August following, they reported that they had found at Brinkburn 'one tene challes, ij owlde westmentes, one owld coppe, ij smalle belles, one smalle hand bell, one holly water pot of bras.'²

Brinkburn occurs in the list of churches and chapels in Alnwick deanery which were without incumbents and served by 'stipendiary priests' about the year 1577.³

The commission appointed under the great seal 'for enquireing of ecclesiasticall livings within the county of Northumberland,' on June 1st, 1650, recommended that 'these towns and hamletts being nere adjoyneing' may be added to the parish of Long Horsley, 'viz., Cansy-parke, Long-leeses, Thistlehaugh, Easter and Wester-haugh, Bridgham, Helmehill, Brenk-heugh, and Thornehaugh.'¹

A pension or stipend, payable out of the land revenue office, of £6 13s. 4d., reduced by certain deductions to £6 2s., was the only emolument of the minister.² The cure seems to have been generally held by the vicar of Felton, the stipendiary curate of Framlington, or by some other person who already held an ecclesiastical appointment in the neighbourhood.

The church was maintained in tenantable repair until the beginning of the seventeenth century. At a visitation held at Alnwick, November 2nd, 1602, the churchwardens were presented because 'their church is still in decaie, their church doores want a key; they have no clarke.'³ At a visitation, May 18th, 1603, also held at Alnwick, the presentment was repeated, for 'their church is still in decaie in the roofe and windowes; they have no communion table cloth nor surpcloth.'⁴ During the course of the century the roof fell in,⁵ and the regular service lapsed, it is stated, in the year 1683,⁶ but the occasional offices, particularly burials, continued until the beginning of the nineteenth century. The bell of 'Brinkburn chapel' was stolen in 1717 by Ralph Blacklaw and George Wilson of Sandifordstone, near Newcastle, tinkers.⁷

About the middle of the eighteenth century, a scheme put forth by Dr. John Sharp, archdeacon of Northumberland, and others, for the re-roofing and general repair of the church, met with considerable support. A petition was presented in 1765 to Quarter Sessions for a brief, for which the magistrates gave a certificate. In 1766 the brief was obtained from chancery and produced the sum of £1,100.¹

In 1767 the vicar of Felton, who claimed the priory church of Brinkburn as a chapel in his parish of Felton and the right to appoint the minister thereof, together with the then curate of Brinkburn, executed what purported to be a deed of severance, and the benefice was augmented by a grant of £200 from Queen Anne's bounty, to meet a corresponding sum given by local benefactors. William Fenwick, the owner of the Brinkburn estate, who claimed the freehold of the church or chapel to be his own property, as parcel of the site of the priory comprised in the grant from the Crown in 1572, with the right to nominate the minister of the donative chapel or extra-parochial place, was not a party to the deed nor did he consent to the augmentation. After Mr. Fenwick's death in 1782, his executors continued their opposition, and without the consent of the owner of the estate the repair of the fabric could not be effected without committing an act of trespass. Neither William Fenwick nor his successors, the owners of Brinkburn, ever agreed to the claim of the vicar of Felton to the patronage purported to be reserved in the deed of 1767; consequently, with the assent, tacit or otherwise, the appointment of the curate from time to time was made by the bishop by lapse.

On February 12th, 1776, the bishop appointed Richard Witton, the nomination being for the turn in the bishop 'by lapse of time.' On February 19th, 1821, William Lishman was appointed by the bishop, the nomination belonging to him 'in right of his bishopric for the turn by lapse of time.' On March 5th, 1833, in admitting George Dobson, the bishop describes the benefice as a perpetual curacy 'to which he had been nominated by King William the IV., the true and undoubted patron thereof for this turn by lapse of time.' On January 31st, 1840, Henry Bell was admitted upon the nomination of Lord Chancellor Cottenham, patron by reason of lapse of time 'as is asserted.' There is no recitation by whom he was nominated in the admission of John Hicks on August 9th, 1849.²

Brinkburn was visited May 30th, 1826, by Archdeacon Singleton, who notes in his minute book :

² All from the Auditor's Accounts, etc., quoted in Mr. Hewlett's Report, dated 30th April, 1889.

It seems to me nearly impossible to lay out the money collected towards the reparation of this fabric with any possible success, even could we set to work with the hearty consent of the owner of the adjoining land, whose rights come, at all events, close to the abbey walls. The old font is still standing. Mr. Lishman, the present minister, was appointed by the late bishop, as he was given to understand, upon a lapse, but by whose default he knows not. He receives from the Crown an ancient payment of £6 1s. 9d. The parishioners generally claim the right of burial in the abbey and the minister takes fees accustomed. The owner of the soil adjoining has within the last six or seven years pretended to claim fees also, but it is known to be a palpable extortion—he has too contrived to get the key into his possession. I showed Mr. Lishman, or rather stated to him, the acknowledgment of my predecessor's executor: the sum is not quite £900, and he proposes to pay it over to my account in the course of the present summer. I have left with Mr. C. W. Bigge (of Linden) the whole of the papers on this subject for his consideration, as to what had best be done with this long accumulation of subscriptions.

1828. Mr. Bigge had duly returned all the papers. They are now in my possession together with his letter, and the voucher for the money, paid to me by my predecessor's executor and bought by my order and in my name into the public funds with directions to the bankers, Messrs. Sir M. W. Ridley & Co., Newcastle, to invest the dividends as they arise, for accumulation.

1836, September 10th. Messrs. Ridley & Co., by letter of this date inform me that in the 3 per cent. Consol. in my official name there are £1,609 12s. 2d. for Brinkburn and Lucker. Lucker is only so much principal as produces the modicum of interest which they yearly receive—the rest is all for Brinkburn when we know how to use it.¹

Under an order in council given at Windsor on February 23rd, 1891, 'the township or place of Brinkburn' was united for ecclesiastical purposes to the township or chapelry of Long Framlington, severed from the vicarage of Felton, and constituted a benefice or parish in the diocese of Newcastle, under the name of the vicarage and parish of Long Framlington with Brinkburn. The church or chapel of Long Framlington was to be the parish church of the parish so constituted, the patronage being vested in the bishop of Newcastle and his successors. There was a special reservation 'that this scheme shall not in any way affect the right, title or interest claimed by the said Arthur Hodgson Cadogan in respect of the said building known as Brinkburn priory or the site thereof, or the appointment of a chaplain thereto.'²

The ward or township of Brinkburn South Side, added to Brinkburn High Ward in 1889 for Poor Law purposes, comprises 984 acres, divided into the farms of Brinkhough, Thistleyhaugh, and Westerhough. Middlehough, also on the south side of the river, has always formed part of the High Ward.

In 1568 Cuthbert Horsley held Brenkheugh, Thristlechaugh, and lands in Weldon, together with Scrainwood, a moiety of Horsley, etc.¹ At the same period Roger Thornton of Witton held lands in Brenkheughe and Todburne, etc.² These properties may possibly represent the six tenements in the water of Coquet, apparently not far from the priory, held by the prior and convent at the dissolution of the house.³

Brinkhough is beautifully situated, and being in a more sheltered situation than the old tower at Long Horsley seems to have become the residence of the family in the reign of Elizabeth. In the early part of the seventeenth century, Lancelot Horsley of Brinkhough, son of Thomas

Robert Horsley, the eldest son, not mentioned in the administration bond, married his cousin german, Anne, daughter of John Horsley of Horsley and heir of her brother George Horsley of Horsley, and resided at Brinkheugh. He died in 1622, apparently in very early manhood, leaving an only child Fortune, afterwards wife of Robert Carr of North Biddick.² On 'July 26th, 20 Charles II.,'³ Robert Carr the elder and Robert Carr the younger, both of North Biddick, for the sum of £390 conveyed Brinkheugh to James Bilton of the same place.⁴ James Bilton was rated for Brinkheugh in 1663 at £30 per annum.⁵ A quit-rent of £2 13s. 4d. continues to be paid Mr. Cutlibert Riddell as heir of Sir Thomas Horsley's estates.⁶

* Roger Fenwick of Brinkburn, afterwards of Catraw, who married Margaret, daughter of Jane Bilton of Brinkheugh, had issue four sons and three daughters, named in the will of their uncle Joseph Bilton, dated 27th February, 17267. Joseph Fenwick, eldest son of Roger Fenwick, baptised 8th February, 16923 (Framlington Register), took a lease of Brinkheugh and married his cousin Margaret, daughter and co-heiress of Francis Bilton of Newton Park and Brinkheugh, by whom he had issue. After her death he married, secondly, 24th November, 1737, Margaret, widow of Michael Wheatley and daughter of William Cook of Branshaugh (cf. vol. v. of this work, p. 496), by whom he had further issue.

Thomas Horsley, afterwards Sir Thomas Horsley, knight, the second but eldest surviving son of the Lancelot Horsley mentioned above, entered his pedigree at the Heralds' Visitation in 1666, being then 54 years of age. He was rated for Thrisleyhaugh at £30 and for 'Netherhouse' in Brinkburn parish in 1663.¹ On September 3rd, 1717, Edward Horsley Widdrington of Horsley, as a Roman Catholic, registered two messuages called Thislehaugh and Netherhouse in the parish of Brinkburn of the yearly rent of £70; and on March 3rd, 1763, Thomas Riddell and Margaret his wife, of Great Swinburn, registered High Thrisleyhaugh and Low Thrisleyhaugh, each of the yearly rent of £44, and Netherhouse of the rent of £13.² Thistlehaugh now belongs to Sir Thomas Horsley's descendant and representative, Mr. Cuthbert Riddell. Netherhouse, a small farm of 39 acres without any homestead, lying between Todstead and the inn at Weldon Bridge, was sold in 1903 by Mr. Cuthbert Riddell to Mr. Beresford Lisle.

A small detached portion of the Lisle estate, comprising about 10 acres, lying near Middle-heugh, was sold in 1898 by the late Mr. W. B. Lisle to Mr. Lancelot Fenwick of Brinkburn.

The property at Westerhaugh, owned by John Thornton in 1663,¹ represented the lands held at Brenkheugh by Roger Thornton in 1568,² which in their turn may have been the three cottages at West-hugh, held by the prior and convent of Brinkburn at the period of the dissolution.³

The later history of the place is that of the Netherwitton estates. In the first half of the eighteenth century it was occupied, together with Middleheugh, by Henry Collingwood of the family of Branxton and Cornhill.⁴ He lived to the great age of 103 (or 105), and having retained his senses to the last died February 19th, 1756, greatly beloved in his neighbourhood. He was buried at Brinkburn, the pall being supported by his five great-great-nephews, William Fenwick, John Fenwick, William Swinburne, Ralph Soulsby and Edward Ward. Twelve of his children and grandchildren attended the funeral.⁵

Westerheugh forms part of the Wingates estate, purchased some years ago from Mr. Trevelyan of Netherwitton, by the late Mr. John Straker, and now belongs to his son, Mr. J. C. Straker.

BRINKBURN LOW WARD OR WELDON.

Brinkburn Low Ward, or Weldon, with a southern exposure and extended river frontage, has an area of 591 acres. As early as 1472, part of the forest of Weldon was granted to William, the prior, and the convent of Brinkburn by Thomas Lisle of Felton, with the consent of his son Robert and grandson Humphrey.¹ At the period of the dissolution of the monasteries the prior and convent held a tenement and appurtenances in Weldon-dike, let to the widow of Thomas Bell, as tenant at will, at the yearly rent of 6s. 8d.² The messuage called Weldon-hall in the parish of Felton and the land belonging to it, then or theretofore in the occupation of Thomas Lisle, of the clear yearly value of 26s. 8d., a messuage in the occupation of Richard Turner of the clear yearly value of 10s., a messuage and lands in the occupation of Thomas Todd of the clear yearly value of 6s. 8d., all some time parcel of the possessions of the dissolved monastery of Brinkburn, were granted, with other places, March 9th, 1551/2, to Sir John Horsley of Horsley, knight.³ It may be safely assumed that Weldon-hall was purchased from Sir John Horsley, either by Thomas Lisle, who was tenant in 1552, or by Tristram Lisle.

*The Lisleys and Horsleys up the Coquet dwell,
Not far from Thornton is a healing well,
Which draws its virtue from vast seams of coal.
This min'ral makes us wealthy, warm and whole.⁴

Tristram Lisle, gent., was of Weldon-hall December 21st, 1609, when with Lancelot Turner of Brinkburn and Thomas Robinson of Comefeilde⁵ he purchased from Morris and Phillips, the Crown grantees, the tithes of the lands and tenements upon the water of Coquet, etc., held by Michael Tod, chaplain.⁶ On February 15th, 1615/6, Lancelot Turner and Thomas Robinson conveyed to Tristram Lisle the tithes of corn, hay,

wool, lamb, etc., arising and accruing from the hamlet, tenement, and capital messuage of Weldon-hall, the third part of the tithes, great and small, of two cottages and lands at Todstead and Okehaugh, the third part of the tithes, great and small, of two cottages and lands in Wester Brenkheugh, then in the occupation of Robert Clavering of Learchild, gent., all parcel of the possessions of the dissolved monastery of Brinkburn.¹

Although it has not been found possible to attach the Lises of Weldon to the pedigree of the historic Lises of Woodburn and Felton, their consanguinity is undoubted, for the last Robert Lisle of Felton, by his will in 1657, gave to his 'loveing cosyn Robert Lisle of Weldon,' with a rent charge of £40 out of his coal mines at Coxlodge, near Newcastle, his 'lands, tenements and hereditaments adjoining upon Weldon aforesaid, commonly called or known by the name of the New Intack,' and also the farms of Cathough, Turnerstead and Toddstead.² In 1663, Mr. Robert Lisle was rated for 'Weldon with the Intacks, Cainfield with the Intacks, and Turnerstead,' all in the parish of Brinkburn.³

WELDON-HALL IN 1888.

Warburton, writing about 1715, says, 'Weldon, the seat of Robert Lisle, esq., (is) pleasantly situated on the north side of the river Coquet and well adorned.'⁴ Weldon-hall, long deserted⁵ by its owners and used as a farm house, was standing ruinous in 1895, but was taken down before 1900.

Mr. Beresford Lisle's MSS.

1736, August 10th; London. Dear brother I should have been very glad to have settled in the country had not my unfortunate misconduct reduced my circumstances to such a state as to require such desperate adventures, and I also sincerely assure you without any adulation I should scarcely care to return to England if I did not think of seeing you alive and my voyage turned out to both our satisfactions. I set out to-morrow for Bristol to go surgeon in the ship Queen Elizabeth, Chas. Tweedy, master, to Guinea and Barbadoes. I have £4 per mens. wages, and 1 shilling for every slave, which is 600, viz., 250. Your most affectionate brother, Will. Lesle. Ibid.

I, William Lisle of London, surgeon, now on an intended voyage from Bristol to Guinea, to make this my last will and testament in manner following. Item, I give and bequeath (after my just debts are fully paid) all my estate and effects in any kind or quality whatsoever and wheresoever unto my loving brother Robert Lisle of Weldon, in the county of Northumberland, gentleman, for ever. And I make my said brother full and sole executor of this my last will. In witness whereof, I, the said William Lisle have hereunto set my hand and seal this tenth day of August in the year of our Lord 1736. Ibid.

1768, 26th March. Will of Dorothy Proctor of Carvill, Northumberland, widow. I give Carvill, otherwise called Cousens house, to my cousin George Lisle of Newcastle, esq. On the death of Robert de Lisle in 1860 Weldon and other estates passed to his sister, Mrs. Hugh Moises, who assumed the name of Lisle. On her death without issue in 1882 she was succeeded by her nephew, Mr. William Beresford Orde, who also assumed the name of Lisle. He died in 1902, and having survived his only son, Mr. Bertram Lisle, was succeeded by his grandson, Mr. William Beresford Orde Lisle, the present owner, who is a minor.

In 1663 Thomas Robson was rated for Todstead.¹ At the election of knights of the shire in 1722, Robert Turner of Rothbury Forest voted for Turnerstead and Robert Bulman of Morpeth for Todstead, and again in 1748 Lancelot Turner of Dents-hole voted for lands in Brinkburn.² Todstead is now the property of Mr. Beresford Lisle.

In 1763 Thomas Riddell and Elizabeth Margaret his wife had a rent from Low Weldon, let to John Swan, of £36, and from Side Banks, let to Robert Lisle, a rent of £5.³ Low Weldon was acquired in 1903 from Mr. Cuthbert Riddell by Mr. Beresford Lisle.

The bridge at Weldon was built by order of Quarter Sessions in 1744.⁴ Near it is an inn, beyond all other places in Northumberland the headquarters of fishers and once the resort of Roxby, Doubleday and others. It is over and over again mentioned in the book of angling songs :—

 Is waiting for the sickle's sweep, in a' its liveried gold;
 And down by bonnie Hedley-wood, where creep the waters still,
 The trout has made, aneath the shade, deep, deep, his simmer hold.
 There, when the breeze just waves the trees, cast far an' fine ' the flee,'
 And let it drap as saftly as can drap the simmer rain:
 For let the show'rs but shew their powers, all fruitless will it be;
 And this maun be, dear Coquet side, or ere I come again!
